PREFACE.

The dominant tone of this volume is War! War! War! Here are detailed the movements of both armies during much of 1779 and 1780. We have the details of the British raids on Newark and Elizabethtown in January, 1780, accompanied by their harsh and unnecessary cruelty—pages 151-3, 155, 166-8, 174-9, 180-2, 188-9, 221, 394-5; of the raid on Bergen County near Fort Lee, in March, 1780—pages 253, 257, 280, 306-8, 321, 323-4, 378; of the attack on Connecticut Farms and Elizabeth in June, 1780—pages 414-18, 421-424, 432, 433, 439, 440, 441, 445-6, 448, 449, 451-3, 455, 457, 461-2, 464-5, 474-7, 480, 481-4, 490, 492-98, 531-7, 564-5, 568; the raid of the British by way of the Newark meadows and their approach on Newark in May, 1780—pages 394-5, 402, 501; the British raid on Woodbridge, in May, 1780—page 406; the bold exploits of the daring New Jersey Refugee, Ensign Moody, May, 1780—page 552. The attack on Connecticut Farms, accompanied by the burning of the Presbyterian Church and the murder of Parson Caldwell's wife, elicited a practically unanimous cry of horror from all men of the time in whose bosoms a spark of humanity remained. By way of contrast we have the spectacle of the cold-blooded indifference of a New Jersey Refugee, who viewed the remains of the martyred woman apparently without a feeling of regret—an indifference even more horrid than the barbarity which had wrought her death—pages 564-5.

These raids on Connecticut Farms, Springfield, Newark and Bergen County undoubtedly worked more harm than benefit to the British cause, arousing as they did the most peaceably inclined men to the horrors of grim war, and even to threats of retaliation by the Americans—pages 544–5.

In connection with the raid on Elizabethtown is the extraordinary and incredible episode at the house of Governor Livingston in which Miss Susan Livingston is reported to have indulged in gentle dalliance with the Colonel Commandant of a British regiment engaged in the expedition—pages 494–8, 522 n.

We have Washington's contemporary account of the brilliant exploit of General Wayne in attacking the blockhouse at Little Ferry, Bergen County, June, 1780—pages 577–8. And in connection with the same affair we have Andre's famous poem of the Cow Chace—pages 585, 668.

Details are given of the raid on Shrewsbury in March, 1780—page 299.

While these events were going on, calculated to absorb men's minds, there were still those who found time and inclination to discourse at length upon the policy and practicability of regulating prices by legislation, and by mass meetings to fix the value of the paper currency—pages 594–6, 615, 620.

There is quite a display of the activities of the ladies during the Revolution—pages 462, 486.

While these larger affairs were uppermost, the common incidents of life went on apparently without interruption; so we have accounts of the manufacture of salt, of the opening of the Grammar School in Queen's College on the Raritan in the fall of 1779; of the demand for School

Masters—page 391; of the opening of the Newark Academy, in 1780—pages 199–209.

It is gratifying to notice that Princeton College and Grammar School had been “revived from the desolations of war”—page 293. One of the sad results of those “desolations” is the forced sale of the property of Lord Stirling—pages 262–4. But with all these war doings much land and property was bartered and sold, farming was carried on, and stock raising diligently pursued.

Much light is thrown upon the economic and social conditions of the times by the communications and advertisements. It is doubtful if a similar portrayal of the actual conditions of the times in New Jersey can be found elsewhere.

TRENTON, NOVEMBER 3.

On Saturday last at a Joint-Meeting of the Honorable the Council and the Assembly of this State, His Excellency WILLIAM LIVINGSTON, Esquire, was re-appointed Governor for the ensuing year.

At the opening of this Session the Honorable JOHN STEVENS, Esquire, was re-chosen Vice-President of the Legislative-Council, and the Honorable CALEB CAMP, Esquire, Speaker of the House of Assembly. JOHN STEVENS, jun. Esquire, is re-appointed Treasurer for the ensuing year.

We hear that General Sullivan has marched the army under his command, from Easton, to join the grand American army at West-Point.

From Elizabethtown we learn, that on the morning of the 27th ult. some of the enemy, in boats, went up Newark river, and set fire to our guard-houses, but they soon returned without doing any other mischief.

We have the pleasure to inform our readers, that the party of the enemy that came up to Van Veghter's bridge, to burn the boats, as mentioned in our last paper, suffered much more considerably than was at first imagined; the militia killed three of them, made six prisoners, and wounded a considerable number; they pushed them so closely, that they dropped a great number of their caps, coats, and other articles; and if it had not been for a large body of foot that were landed at South-Amboy, to cover their retreat, every one of them would have fallen into our hands. Their commanding officer, who was made prisoner, is Lieutenant-Colonel Simcoe, of a new corps called the Queen's American Rangers.

It is to be observed that Simcoe is one of the enemy's principal partizans, and that his exploits have generally been marked with acts of the most inhuman barbarity. In this expedition Capt. Peter Voorhees, of the first Jersey regiment, unfortunately fell into their hands near Brunswick, and was massacred in the most shocking manner. Dr. Ryker and Mr. John Polhemus were made prisoners by the covering party, with several others.¹

Returns of Members of the Legislature received since our last.

To AZARIAH DUNHAM, Esquire.

SIR,

I BELIEVE you are so well acquainted with my circumstances for some weeks past, that you will readily pardon the delay which has attended this my answer to your address.

I acknowledge with you, Sir, that risking one's life, and spending one's all, are claims to consequence very frequent at this day; but, Sir, I must observe, they are claims, to which neither you, nor the chicken-hearted gentleman who writes for you, can ever pretend.

That you was at a loss what to do with Mr. Timoleon, appears not only from the first sentence, but from the whole of your elegant production. Indeed had it not been for the pretty words, meanness and timidity, and the pretty idea of mixing them, I believe you would scarce have sallied forth this second time. I shall only say, that, whatever bashfulness you may have observed in my former address, you shall, for the future, have no cause to complain that I do not use "open and explicit terms."

I did not mean to insinuate, that your character is not fair and reputable—a very different cause induced me to smile at seeing you step forth the CHAMPION; and I believe whoever knows you, and whoever respects you, thinks with me, that you acted a part very inconsistent and truly ridiculous.

I wish not, Mr. Dunham, to "stab the reputation or to wound the feelings of an honest man;" I wish, Sir, to see the truth investigated, and to contribute my mite towards checking the prevailing villainy of the times. I very unexpectedly took up my pen to address you; just before I sat down for this purpose, I was speaking in favour of your honesty and fidelity, tho' I could not but at the same time disapprove of your conduct in endeavoring to exculpate a set of men, whom I knew to deserve the censure of their country.—But, Sir, when I was informed by that venerable gentleman, from whose character you endeavoured to detract, by prefixing a quondam to his honorable titles that you, whilst a commissary in our army, had been a speculator in rum and flour; that you had purchased several hogsheads of the former, and sold them again at an advanced price for your own private emolument: I say, Sir, upon being thus informed, my indignation rose, and I could not but deem your conduct “infamous and detestable,” and consider you, if guilty of it, as deserving “of being turned out of employment with disgrace, of being banished from the society of virtuous men, and of being looked upon with as much abhorrence as a robber.” Influenced solely by a regard for the publick weal, I presumed to call upon you in the Gazette and ask you respecting the truth of this account.—I left my name for you at the Printer’s.—I engaged, if you denied the charge, you should hear farther from me.—Where is the meanness, where appears the timidity of my conduct? Could I have acted more generously, or more frankly accused you, after receiving such information? Let the publick determine.

I now come to your defence, which is prefaced with a detail of motives sufficient, in your opinion, to deter you and your brethren from dishonest practices, and with a wish, that, if they have not had this desirable effect, you may be dismissed from office, and held up to view as melancholy objects of human depravity. I heartily join you, my friend, though I would rather you had said hung up as examples to others, provided no commissions were granted to any department on the purchase of hemp. Pardon me, Mr. Dunham, I cannot help laughing at this unmeaning jargon.—Pray, have not all offenders sufficient, nay similar motives to engage them to be virtuous? Or, has any person attempted to prove, that commissaries and quartermasters ought not to be honest? Surely, you and your writer were very dull, or very much at a loss indeed!—Your defence itself is of the same species; you deny what you was never accused with, you confess the charges exhibited against you, and endeavour to palliate your conduct, by observations, for which those, under whom you act, are, I believe, but little obliged to you. Pray, Sir, at what time of year did you receive orders to desist from the purchase of flour? What quantity was then on hand, and what quantity was procured at the moderate price you mention? Had the purchasing commissaries, in the State of Pennsylvania, similar directions? I wish you to answer these questions, perhaps it may unravel some of the mysteries of your department, or perhaps it may remove some suspicions respecting their conduct.

I shall say nothing farther concerning your defence. I only wish, for the good of my country, that Congress would raise the Commissions on all kinds of purchases to such a HEIGHT, that gentlemen, who have condescended to become commissaries and quartermasters, may not be under the necessity of becoming traders, to support themselves and their families.—I will not deny a word of what you say, concerning your zeal and activity in your office; on the contrary, I will do you the justice to declare, that, tho' I believe you have also committed iniquity, and transgressed with your brethren, few, if any, have done greater justice to the community, or more warmly exerted themselves to procure proper supplies for the army, and to make their purchases at the lowest possible rates. As to your forty-pound stroke, it is too little to deserve an answer—Do you imagine that, commissary-like, I wished to give such a price for an ordinary plantation? At what rate, good Sir, do you pay for a yoke of ordinary oxen?—I suppose, when you declare, that you never attempted, in a publick News-paper, to prove that the depreciation of our money was twenty to one, you mean to insinuate that I am the author of the True Patriot.—You are unlucky, Mr. Dunham, in your conjectures on this head; in your first address, you fix the matter upon a Divine, a President, or a Judge—and now, Sir, you father those productions upon poor Timoleon, a farmer of Somerset; and I assure you, Sir, I have no more connection with the writer of those pieces, than I have with the Pope of Rome.

I would now proceed and attack, agreeable to promise, the commissary and quartermaster departments at large; but alas! you, their GOLIATH, have shamefully deserted them—After marching forth with great parade at the very appearance of an antagonist, you have retired under cover of a negative proposition, and suspecting that even here you may receive considerable annoyance, you have resolved to secure a retreat into the citadel of your own personal honesty.

If, Sir, I should now inform you, that two or three of your deputies were apprehended by the magistrates of a certain town, whilst purchasing cattle at double and treble the current price, on suspicion of their being Tories who had procured a quantity of counterfeit money from New-York—If I should relate to you, that a commissary up the North-River, was last winter the purchaser of a large quantity of rum at Seven Pounds per gallon, which two of his relations purchased at Philadelphia, evidently with publick money, at Four Pounds per gallon, he and they sharing the profits, which amounted, clear of expences, to Five Thousand Pounds—If I tell you, that a few months ago, a commissary, in Hunterdon county, purchased a quantity of wheat at Ten Dollars per bushel, and afterwards paid for it Twelve, and still advised the farmer to wait longer for his money, as he was sure wheat would soon be Twenty Dollars per bushel—If, Sir, I inform you that last week, whilst the court of sessions was held at Newark, the quartermasters there received orders to give FIFTY POUNDS per ton, for new hay, when the inhabitants had no idea of asking more than One Hundred Dollars; in consequence of which they, to their credit be it spoken, memorialized Congress on the subject—If, without attending to particular instances of villainy, I should roundly assert, that the present depreciated state of our currency is, in a very great measure, owing to the misconduct of those who have purchased for the army; and if, in confirmation hereof, I should, among a variety of other arguments, adduce instances redounding much to your own honour, and that of others of your brethren of the staff, plainly evincing, that it has been, and is greatly in your power, to regulate the prices of the necessaries of the army—I say, Sir, if I should thus proceed to shew, that a great number of your brethren have indeed been Harpies who have preyed upon our vitals, What is to be my answer from Mr. Dunham?—

“What I have averred, amounts only to a negative proposition.—All I have to do, is to challenge those I have dealt with, to convict me.—I must be supposed innocent, till they can prove me otherwise.—I did not undertake to justify every individual, who purchases for the publick.—Those who are honest and attentive, need no vindication, and those who are not, deserve none.—Others, when arraigned, must defend themselves.” You have turned out just such a hero, as I thought, and all the reward you need expect for “your extraordinary zeal and labours,” is the ridicule of the honest part of your brethren, who certainly must laugh at your unnecessary defence of your reputation—and the hearty curses of such as know themselves to be guilty, who, having looked up to you as an able defender of their cause, must be chagrined at their disappointment.

I can single out, Sir, a number of gentlemen in the commissary and quartermaster departments, whose souls I know to be superior to every species of fraud; you should not therefore give me your permission to indulge my inclination in trying to prove, that they have all been villains;—but, Sir, you should be as honest in transcribing the expressions of your opponent as you say you have been in disposing of the publick money.

I have much more to say to you, but I have already transgressed the bounds to which I ought to have limited myself.—I possess not a sentiment, Sir, which I dare not utter. I utter none, which I dare not defend: I should therefore now subscribe my name to this address; but as you discover so great an aversion from knowing me, and as I wish not to intrude upon gentlemen, I shall again call myself,

Your most obedient servant,

TIMOLEON.

Somerset, June 29, 1779.

MR. COLLINS,

NOTWITHSTANDING all the reflections which have been cast upon your correspondent the True Patriot, I cannot but think, that could his scheme take place, it would be the most just and equitable of any yet proposed. If I took up his plan, it was for substance this, viz. that what our currency had depreciated, should be sunk immediately by the community, and either hard money borrowed, or new emissions made, in order to exchange the remainder, dollar for dollar; and then to have a regulating act passed, to keep the money good, and prevent monopoly, extortion, &c. Had this plan been executed at the time it was proposed, I humbly conceive, that it would have saved us many millions of expence, and prevented our money from degenerating into almost blank paper, and enabled us to carry on the war with infinitely less perplexity and much greater certainty of success. It is well known, that our enemy's greatest hope and expectation is derived from the depreciation of our currency, which they have endeavoured to accomplish by every means in their power. I think the True Patriot has sufficiently proved, that it is just; that they who have received their money, at the rate of fifteen or twenty for one, ought to sink it in the same proportion, if it is right to tax money at all; and that it is right that money should be taxed either by lessening the interest, or deducting a part of it, must be evident to every impartial enquirer after truth. That plan, which (all things considered) will do the least injustice to the community, ought to be adopted; and who can say, that it is not just to punish the guilty, and exempt innocent sufferers? Sed "hic labor, hoc opus est:" here is the difficulty; but supposing the innocent should suffer by a tax of ten or fifteen for one upon their money, would they not then be as well off as at present, with the whole, if the remainder would purchase the same? Surely they would. They therefore cannot be losers by such an exchange; and the community in general would, in my humble opinion, be much advantaged by having the expence of the war diminished, our national debt lessened, and our enemies confounded.

A FRIEND TO LIBERTY.

To be sold by the subscriber, living in Kingwood township, Hunterdon county, a Plantation containing 175 acres of land, situate, lying and being in the township of Amwell, adjoining to Peter Young's, within a mile and a half of William Chumberling's mill. Said plantation is now in the possession of James Matthews; there is a house and barn on said place, a good bearing orchard, some peach and cherry trees, a spring of good water near the door, 7 or 8 acres of meadow cleared, and more to be made; there are about 70 or 80 acres of cleared land, the rest timber. Any person inclining to purchase said plantation, may know the terms by applying to the subscriber.

To the PUBLICK.

WHEREAS Richard Stevens and John Mehelm, Esqrs. in the Pennsylvania and New-Jersey papers, have, as trustees for selling and disposing of part of the real estate of William Alexander, Earl of Stirling, among others, advertised two certain tracts of land near Crosswicks, adjoining Plumsted's and Willock's land, containing about 526 acres;¹ and whereas the greatest part of one of said tracts of land, the beginning of which is at a poplar standing on Crosswick's creek, is now in the possession of James and Peter Sexton, by conveyance from Thomas Plumstead to James Sexton, and from James Lawrence, John Leonard, Thomas Reynolds to Peter Sexton, whereby we the subscribers look upon ourselves to be the true and lawful owners of so much of said land as is included in the above-cited conveyances: therefore we do hereby forewarn all persons from purchasing, as we are determined to dispute the title with any person or persons purchasing the same.

TRENTON, NOVEMBER 10.

Friday last the Hon. the General Assembly of this State adjourned to meet at Mountholly, on Monday following, for the dispatch of publick business.

We are informed that the enemy, to the number of about 1500 or 2000, are upon Staten-Island, and have collected a considerable number of flat-bottomed boats at Billop's Point, in order, it is said, to make a descent into this State; but, from the disposition of several detachments of the Continental Army, as well as our militia, we flatter ourselves they will be frustrated in their predatory designs.

By several corroborating accounts we learn, that the enemy at New-York are preparing for a large embarkation, but their destination is not yet certainly known.

Trenton, House of Assembly, Nov. 1, 1779.

WHEREAS the Honorable the Congress of the United States did, on the 23d day of July, 1779, declare and resolve in the words following, viz.

IN CONGRESS, July 23, 1779.

Whereas, in the unsettled state of publick affairs, during the contest with Great-Britain, the necessities of the United Colonies or States, induced their officers in sundry places, to take possession of divers lots, or pieces of ground, in many of the United Colonies, now States: and barracks, hospitals, stables, storehouses, and other buildings, have been erected thereon, sometimes without the express consent of the proprietors of the land, many of whom now either claim exorbitant rents, or attempt to seize upon, and hold or remove the buildings which were so built, without the express consent of the said proprietors, or where the terms have been agreed on, and the times, for which the grounds have been taken, are expired:

Resolved, That it be recommended to the Legislatures of the respective States, to make effectual provision by laws, for the preservation of the buildings belonging to the United States, within their respective jurisdictions, and for the punishment of those who shall seize upon, or insure the same; and in cases where there are considerable buildings, which cannot be removed with convenience to the publick, the proprietors of the ground be obliged to suffer the buildings to remain thereon, at least during the war, receiving therefor such compensation as shall be allowed by indifferent and proper persons duly appointed and authorized to appraise and value the same: that all grounds, or places occupied for the purposes of defence, although the property of individuals, shall remain, during the war, appropriated (if not before abandoned by orders of the proper authority) for the military purposes intended by their being possessed by the troops, and that no encroachments shall be made on the said grounds or places; but the officer commanding at the post, shall remove all such encroachments on the dependencies of the garrison, the fort, or any out-works thereof, so that such extent of ground shall remain unoccupied, for any private purpose, round the forts or garrisons, as the defence of the same posts may require, and that compensation be made to the proprietor of such grounds, in the manner herein before mentioned.

Therefore, All persons having the charge of hospitals, barracks, stables, or other buildings, erected on lands, the property of private persons, in this State, under the authority, and for the use of the United States, are hereby notified to transmit to the Legislature of this State, an account of the situation, number and nature of such hospitals, barracks, stables and other buildings, together with the space of ground occupied for those purposes, or for the erection of fortresses, and in what manner they respectively came into, and continue in the possession of the United States, within the first week of the next sitting of the General Assembly. And all persons, inhabitants of this State, interested in such hospitals, barracks, stables, or other buildings, or in the lands on which they have been erected, are desired, within the aforesaid time, to state their objections to the Legislature, if any they may have, why a law may not be enacted agreeably to the tenor of the above resolution.

Mr. COLLINS,

WALKING through my entry on Sunday evening last, my eye was caught by a meteor of a very uncommon size, in the south west.—It appeared to me to be as large as a man's hand, very luminous, and descended with great rapidity from the height of about 15 degrees above the horizon, which was the place I first saw it in— But what rendered the thing still more remarkable was, that a crooked crack or luminous stroke appeared immediately afterwards in the sky, which seemed to have described the path of the meteor, and continued for about 10 or 15 minutes.—This phenomenon was altogether extraordinary, and it would afford me great pleasure to have the thoughts of the learned and philosophical, on the subject.

CHATHAM, NOVEMBER 2.

Last Tuesday morning a party of the enemy's light dragoons, consisting of about ninety-six, under the command of Lieut. Col. Simcoe, landed at Amboy, and proceeded, by way of Quibble-Town, to Bound Brook, where they burnt some of the artificers shops, cut and burnt part of the flat bottom boats that lay there, burnt the Dutch church at Raritan, and then proceeded to Somerset courthouse, which they also burnt. From thence they began their retreat, via Brunswick, to South Amboy (where a party of infantry had landed that day to cover their flight) which they effected, with the loss of their Colonel, three privates, and six horses, taken. The rapidity with which they proceeded, and not knowing the route they would retreat, prevented them, in all probability, from shearing the fate of their hapless Colonel. They very inhumanly murdered Capt. Voorhes, of the first Jersey Regiment, after he surrendered himself; and it was with the greatest difficulty, the Governor could restrain the troops from retaliating his death on Col. Simcoe.

FOR THE NEW-JERSEY JOURNAL.

LETTERS ON OUR PAPER CURRENCY.

LETTER I.

WE all know the depreciated state of our paper currency; and there are but few people but what are concerned about the event. In these circumstances, some persons (we must suppose them interested) have proposed to let it die in the hands of the possessors. A proposal so unjust, and contrary to the final interest of these states, will never take place. The Congress have, I trust, in their late circular letter, satisfied people in that respect. That circular letter which, on the whole, is excellent, and in some respects as a cordial to many, yet contains some things not fully understood, and some things respecting which the public would be glad to query. We venerate the Congress; but they know, and we all know, that their conduct is to be looked into; and all they do for the public may be scanned with modesty, and due regard to the public. Every friend to his country has a right, with modesty and humility, to query and propose any thing for the public good, especially respecting our currency, at a time when something must be done, and when 'tis so difficult to know what is best to be done.

Three things I have to offer to the public respecting our paper currency. 1st. The depreciation and the causes of it. 2d. What the Congress mean and should mean by redeeming our bills, and paying our public debts. 3d. What is best to be done in the present state of our depreciated currency.

1. The depreciation, and the cause of it. This I should not spend time to consider, was it not necessary to open and lead the way to what must follow.

The Congress well observe that the causes of the depreciation are both natural and artificial; but I would just observe that the natural, i. e. the quantity is properly the cause; for that only gives opportunity for the artificial causes to take place. Had there not been a surplus of paper ; had there not been so great a quantity, as to have given opportunity to hoard the hard money, no artificial causes would have sunk the value of the paper currency. Thirty million of dollars has been supposed a proper quantity for a circulating medium in these thirteen states ; but I think that sum is ten million of dollars too much, at such a time as this, when we have so little foreign trade, and are cut off from so great a part of our commerce. If twenty million of dollars are a sufficiency for a medium of trade in the present state of things, then the natural depreciation of one hundred and sixty million would be eight to one. Be this as it will, there have been other causes that have helped to bring on the depreciation. The Congress say, "A distrust (however occasioned) entertained by the mass of people, &c. is the cause." This certainly, has done its part ; but the full and proper artificial cause was the people refusing, or neglecting to take it in all payments as freely as if it had been silver ; and as such to use it as a medium of trade in all their dealings, which has often and abundantly been the case, where there was no distrust, but the fullest confidence that the Congress was able and would certainly redeem the bills. This has been the case with multitudes who have dealt by way of barter ; or, as they generally say, in the old way. If twenty million of dollars was a sufficient medium, when used as formerly, and people neglect to use continental money in one half of their dealings, then the circulating medium would be but ten million, which gives room to the one hundred and sixty million to depreciate to sixteen for one. People dealing by way of barter ; or, as they say, in the old way, exchanging one thing for another, has done more towards depreciating our currency than any one thing. If money is not used between man and man as much as may be in all their dealings, but is neglected or set aside, the event as to depreciation is the same as if undervalued and refused. Thus our honest country people, who have all the time been clamouring and blaming they know not who, for the depreciation of our money, have without knowing or considering it, done more to depreciate it than any one sort of men on the Continent. Many through the Continent also have refused to take continental money for wheat, flour, or other necessaries of life, extorting hard money for what they sold : This has also given paper money a sink ; for this has the same tendency as dealing by way of barter ; 'tis setting aside paper money, and insisting upon something else. Again, many refugees from cities and places where the enemy have come ; which refugees were most hearty friends to their country, having preserved some money, or money's worth, with them knowing that hard money was the best standby, at all times and in all places, and that they could help themselves with it in some cases of necessity, when they could not with any thing else, have in their own defence, and to keep their families from starving, been obliged to prefer hard money to other ; and thus unavoidably and innocently been a cause of the depreciation. As every instance of the preferring hard money, or any thing else, to paper, tends to depreciate it.

But the engrossers, forestallers, extortioners, and avaricious traders have been a great, and the most culpable cause of the depreciation. This our people in general are aware of, and view them as pernicious to their country. These extortioners, after having purchased goods or provisions at a certain price, in continental money, have refused to take the same, with a proper advance for their trouble, risk, &c. and instead of proposing to take something else in exchange, as other depreciators have done, they have had the effrontery to offer to take continental money at two, three, four, or more, for one.

I have further to observe, that if there is so much paper money issued as to be a sufficient currency, without any hard money, it immediately begins to depreciate; for the silver and gold ceases to circulate, and paper is no standard. Two thirds of the currency of a country will bear to be paper, and not much more. If paper money is so scarce that a considerable quantity of silver and gold must be drawn out as part of the circulating medium, then paper will keep equal with it; for in general 'tis the most portable and agreeable money to trade with. Thus our paper money formerly kept its value. If there is not such a quantity of hard money passing as a currency, that those who need it upon particular emergencies, can take it at their pleasure, paper money will depreciate; and this will ever be the case, if paper is so plenty as to give particular persons opportunity to hord all the hard money. When hard money ceases to be part of the currency, if free trade is allowed, no legislature will or can avail to keep up the credit of paper money. To decree that men shall not value silver above paper, or not give or take more for one than the other; or to decree that article of commerce, or provisions, shall be bought and sold at a particular price, is in effect to decree that there shall be no free trade, and that many shall suffer, and even starve for want of necessaries which they cannot buy. How suddenly did our gold and silver, yea, even the copper, stop its circulation? How suddenly were they struck dead, when the paper money began to abound? It is strange how suddenly every body knew that hard money was preferable to paper? Hard money is the soul and spirit of paper; for as the spirit keeps the body moving, and as the body without the spirit is dead so is paper without hard money; or in a great measure so. It always has been, and always will be impossible for any government, where there is a free trade, to keep paper money good, unless it is in so small a quantity as to draw out the hard money for part of the circulating medium.

A distrust or fear, in many people, whether the Congress would, whether they could, and whether it would be right for them, to make the paper money as good as silver, has been a considerable cause of the depreciation. Concerning the redemption of our bills, and making them good, I am to query and observe in my next letter.

EUMENES.

LETTER II.

WHAT the Congress say of our ability to redeem our bills and pay our debts is excellent; 'tis rational, and 'tis encouraging and animating. Nor can it be doubted but that the several states will be ready and willing to do this. But still we want to know what they mean by the redemption of our bills, and the payment of our public debts. Had they dropped any word, through the whole of their letter, to have explained this, it would have been pleasing. I watched for something of this from beginning to end, but found it not. The thing desired to be known, or the query, is plainly this: Are the continental dollars, in the end to be made as good to their possessors as so many silver dollars? And must the nominal sum of our debt be paid in silver, or that which is as good? In other words, will any of our continental dollars regain their original value, or will they not? If our continental dollars are in the end to be redeemed as to be made as good as silver, dollar for dollar, and our debts paid in that manner, that is one thing; if not, the next enquiry is in what proportion, and manner shall it be done? As this is an important subject, and few, if any persons on the continent, but what are deeply interested in it, I beg leave to offer a few hints. I say all are deeply interested in it; for all must have their share either in paying or receiving this money. Two or three more large taxes (and large the taxes ought to be) and one or two years expence of buying salt, and a few other necessary articles will sweep off most, if not all the money, from the common sort of people through the country. The money remaining will be in a few mens hands, who have had the opportunity and advantage to secure it. The greatest part of this money has been obtained by these men, when they have not given more than $\frac{1}{4}$, or $\frac{1}{8}$, or $\frac{1}{15}$ or $\frac{1}{20}$ part of the worth of a silver dollar for a continental one. These men, for a very little value, have amassed vast sums of continental money. The enquiry then is, whether 'tis right for these men to receive four, eight, fifteen, or twenty times as much as they gave for their money? And whether 'tis proper and equitable that the country should be heavily taxed for ten, fifteen or twenty years, to pay the principal and probably the interest too, to these men or their heirs, in silver, or that which is as good, when they came by their money at so cheap and easy a rate. Again, which is much the same thing, shall debts contracted between man and man through the country, in the year 1778, 1779 and it may be 1780, be hereafter paid in money that is four, eight, fifteen or twenty times as good as when the debt was contracted? Let us consider what will be the consequence: It can be no less than the unavoidable ruin of multitudes, and that many ways. I shall only mention one. Suppose A buys of B a farm which, before the depreciation, was worth only 1000 l. but now he gives B 8000 l. as many places are now sold at eight or ten times more than they were worth seven years ago. A enters upon his plantation with living stock and other moveables to the value of four or five thousand pounds which, before the depreciation, was not worth more than three hundred pounds. A pays three quarters of the money for his place when he enters upon it, and gives bond for the other two thousand pounds. In four or five years the money is made good; in which space A could with difficulty procure money enough to pay his large taxes, support his family and pay his interest money. At length he is arrested for the two thousand pounds which he owes; his farm is seized and sold, which then at a proper price as money is made good, produces but one thousand pounds; his goods and chattels are also sold for his debt, which at a full price, produce but about three hundred. A is a bankrupt, and seven hundred pounds worse than nothing. His six thousand pounds which he paid down for his place is gone; his farm itself is gone; his moveable estate is gone; and he still owes seven hundred pounds good money. In some such ways must multitudes be unavoidably ruined if the money is made good.

Those who are for having the money made good, will have several things to plead; as 1st. The face of the bill, that it entitles the bearer to receive so many Spanish milled dollars, or their value, in gold or silver. I answer, the face of the bill has not proved true to the many who have been obliged already to spend their estates by reason of the depreciation of the bills. Many widows, aged persons, orphans, &c. besides many that have fled from the enemy and saved a little, would have been glad to have applied to Congress with continental dollars as notes of hand, in order to receive so many milled dollars, or their value, in gold or silver; but must all be told, that the Congress cannot at present answer the face of the bill. If the Congress cannot now, and could not for several years past, make good the face of the bills to those who have suffered so much, and many of them spent their all for want thereof, will there be any reason that they should be able to do it for those who have got their money so easily, and have not been the twentieth part such sufferers as those above mentioned. Some will plead that the Congress is under obligation to make good the bills; and that the whole country is bound and obliged to stand by them and support them in it. I ask to whom are they obliged to do this, and at what time are they obliged to do this; have they been obliged to do it the several years last past; and to help and relieve all the sufferers just now mentioned? Will their obligation be greater in time to come than in time past? And will it be greater to those who have little need, than to those who have suffered so much? Those that plead this argument, will find that it will hereafter bear a dispute; and I am a poor prophet if it does not disappoint those who have built their hopes upon it. The bills shall be properly redeemed, and the debts paid: The Congress and the country will do all in their power so far as 'tis just and equitable; but no man, or bodies of men, are bound to impossibilities, or to injustice.

When the Congress first issued money, not only they but we all hoped that the bills would retain their original value; and they had a right to make the money, or the face of the bill as they did, for every body that received them allowed what they were worth in silver. But 'tis a query whether the Congress had the same right in some of their later emissions: When some of the first emissions were issued, a continental dollar was as good as a silver one, would procure as much, &c. But in some of the later emissions a continental dollar was not worth more, and would not procure more than 1-2, 1-4, 1-8, 1-19 or 1-20th part of a silver dollar: Now the query is, whether the Congress had a right to say that a man that obtained fifteen of these latter dollars, for the value of one silver dollar, should receive the value of fifteen silver dollars? Whether they had a right to assure people that they should receive fifteen times as much for their bills as they cost them? I find the Congress in their circular letter, allow that their power is not unlimited; that if they should pass such and such acts, they would be null and void. They say, 'tis not in their power to annihilate our money, and declare it nothing worth; and that any act of theirs to this purpose would be null and void. And some may be ready to query, if something like this would not be true, if they should pass an act that money should be worth ten times as much as it is, or has been, or can be made to be, except to a very few persons.

The Congress will, undoubtedly do, and the country will support them in doing, that which is just and equitable in all these cases. I doubt not our bills will be promptly redeemed, and our debts equitably paid. But how or in what manner these things ought to be done, shall be the inquiry and consideration in my next letter.

CHATHAM, NOVEMBER 16.

By His EXCELLENCY

WILLIAM LIVINGSTON, Esq;

Governor, Captain, General and Commander in Chief in and over the State of New-Jersey, and Territories thereunto belonging, Chancellor and Ordinary in the Same.

CHATHAM, NOVEMBER 16.

A P R O C L A M A T I O N .

WHEREAS the honourable the Congress, by their resolution of the twentieth day of October last, reciting, "That it becomes us humbly to approach the throne of Almighty God, with gratitude and praise, for the wonders which his goodness has wrought in con“ducting our forefathers to this Western world; for his “protection to them and to their posterity, amid difficulties “and dangers; for raising us their children from deep dis“tress to be numbered among the nations of the earth; and “for arming the hands of just and mighty princes in our “deliverance; and, especially, for that he hath been pleased “to grant us the enjoyment of health, and so to order the “revolving seasons, that the earth hath produced her in“crease in abundance, blessing the labour of the husband-“man, and spreading plenty through the land; that he hath “prospered our arms and those of the ally; been a shield

“to our troops in the hour of danger, pointed their swords “to victory, and led them in triumph over the bulwarks of “the foe; that he hath gone with those who went into the “wilderness against the savage tribes; that he hath stayed
“the hand of the spoiler, and turned back his meditated “destruction; that he hath prospered our commerce, and “given success to those who fought the enemy on the face “of the deep; and, above all, that he hath diffused the “glorious light of the gospel, whereby, through the merits
“of our gracious Redeemer we may become the heirs of his “eternal glory;” did recommend it to the several States to appoint Thursday the ninth day of December next, to be observed as a day of public thanksgiving and praise;—
and did further recommend, that, together with devout thanksgiving, may be joined an humble supplication for the continuance of his favour and protection to these United States; to beseech him that he would be graciously pleased to influence our public councils, and bless them with wisdom from on high, with unanimity, firmness, and success; that he would go forth with our hosts, and crown our arms with victory; that he would grant to his church the plentiful effusions of divine grace, and pour out his holy spirit on all ministers of the gospel; that he would bless and prosper the means of education, and spread the light of christian knowledge through the remotest corners of the earth; that he would smile upon the labours of his people and cause the earth to bring forth her fruits in abundance, that we may with gratitude and gladness enjoy them; that he would take into his holy protection our illustrious Ally, give him victory over his enemies, and render him signally great, as the father of his people, and the protector of the rights of mankind; that he would be graciously pleased to turn the hearts of our enemies, and to dispense the blessings of peace to contending nations; that he would in mercy look down upon us, pardon all our sins, and receive us into his favour; and, finally, that he would establish the Independence of these United States upon the basis of religion and virtue, and support and protect them in the enjoyment of peace, liberty and safety.

I HAVE therefore thought fit, by and with the advice of the honourable Privy Council of this State, to appoint THURSDAY the said ninth day of DECEMBER next, to be set apart and observed throughout this State, as a day of public THANKSGIVING and PRAISE, for the purposes in the above resolution set forth; whereof all the inhabitants of this State are hereby required to take notice and govern themselves accordingly. And, I do hereby recommend it to the ministers of the gospel of every denomination in this State, to perform divine service, and to the people committed to their charge to attend on public worship on that day, and to abstain from all servile labour, and all recreation inconsistent with the solemnity of the festival.

GIVEN under my hand and seal at arms, in Mount-holly, the ninth day of November, in the year of our Lord One thousand seven hundred and seventy-nine, and in the fourth year of the independence of America.

NATH. SCUDDER,	}	Execu- tors.
JAMES KIRKPATRICK,

Freehold, October 11, 1779

Mr. COLLINS,

IN your Gazette, No. 79, I recommended to Congress, &c., the great necessity of laws to regulate trade, as a sure remedy to secure property, encourage industry, and make trade exceeding easy. All who regard the publick good, more than their own private advantage, do allow it would have been very happy for America, had it been gone into when first recommended from Congress. Happy would it be for the United States to come into it now; it would not only expel from our shores the British savages, but that monstrous off-scouring of America, in which alone they are outdone. Unhappy are the people who suffer those things their friends fear, and their enemies wish. I know not a man who is a real friend to his country, that is not for a general regulation of prices; nor one disaffected wretch, who is not against it:—There needs no better criterion to distinguish our friends from our foes. Is there any thing then that ought to hinder us from making use of the only remedy in our power? It is sometimes that Providence blinds the understanding of those whom it destines to destruction, but God forbid that those at the helm of affairs, should ever not fully and repeatedly consider, or that they should, from any unhappy impulse, scruple or hesitate to stay and to stop the measures that please, and are of so much service to their enemies, and injury to themselves.

Particular accidents have caused States to lose their liberty, but this calamity is generally owing to the decay of virtue. A people travel fast to destruction, when individuals consider their interest, as distinct from those of the publick: such notions are fatal to themselves and country. Miserable Men! of whom it is hard to say, whether they ought to be most the objects of pity or contempt.—Tho' I always reflect with a high pleasure on the integrity and understanding of my countrymen, which joined with a pure and humble devotion to the great Author of every blessing they enjoy, will, I hope, insure to them and their posterity, all temporal and eternal happiness; yet when I consider, that in every age and country, there have been bad men, I am constrained to believe, that there are some here, against whom we ought to be upon our guard.

It is needless to numerate the many evils the want of wholesome laws, to restrain the prevailing and enormous vices of the present day, have occasioned; hence we are under the necessity of having committees, vainly endeavouring to do the business of the Legislatures: hence we have needless petitions, proving in the publick papers, that the depreciation is twenty to one, and thereby causing our enemies to rejoice, and publish it by handbills in the streets of Askelon,* that all would soon be over with America; hence you have given us a publication from the Pennsylvania Packet, in your Gazette, No. 82, the author of which, T. S. tells us, has thought on our finances with some degree of attention, whose plan respecting the loan, is too subtle to deserve a serious refutation. I would inform this author, as well as others, that there are thousands of tenants in this State, (and doubtless throughout America) who pay very high rents, and must likewise pay the land tax, who, in the beginning of these times, had their whole patrimony at interest, have received the whole since in continental money, and their all, which many of them have on loan, is original value. Such plans therefore can only have a tendency to annihilate the remaining value of our currency. In a word, does not his plan, like the Patriot's, require Congress to divest themselves of justice, of virtue, of honour, of fidelity and truth? Are not their plans inconsistent with the resolutions, the dignity and justice of the first assembly on earth? May that august assembly ever look down with contempt upon all and every plan, so derogatory to their honour and resolutions.

These great points of honour no doubt Mr. Addison had in view, when he made the Numedian prince to say, “Honour's a sacred tie, the law of Kings,

 “The noble mind's distinguishing perfection;
 “That aids and strengthens virtue, when it meets her,
 “And imitates her actions, where she is not:
 “It ought not to be sported with.”¹

Which seems to be better spoke than understood by Mr. Addison. The ancients certainly had no notion of honour, as distinct from virtue: moreover, I should be glad to see the performance of those eminent writers, more comfortable to the dignity of Congress, and interests of the community at large.

The Legislature of this State, in my opinion, ought to have been taxed the loan itself, instead of the certificates, for which none but the honest man will pay; besides numbers from Pennsylvania, &c., have put money in the loan here: however, to tax the loan, consequently will have a tendency of destroying the publick fund, while cash remains untaxed: it appears to me, that if the landed man is to pay the tax, or in other words, the farmers, for in this sense, the freeholder and tenant are the landed men, the proprietor will pay no tax for land on lease; hence the tenant will never be able to purchase a freehold, and the possessor of freeholds now will be obliged to sell to the engrosser and forestaller, who, in all probability, will, according to the present mode of taxation, be able to purchase whole townships. It is true taxes on possessions are¹ levied without expences, but have every other disadvantage; and because of the enormous unequal division of property, in this case, will always be converted into punishments on industry; exorbitant taxes, like extreme necessity, destroys industry by producing despair. A disinterested Legislature will observe the point, when the emolument ceases, and the prejudice begins.—There are many advantages can only be secured to our country by agriculture, which is the true basis of national health, riches and populousness: it is impossible to tell from history, (under equitable laws) what will be the effect of agriculture, industry and commerce, urged on by the competition of States, united in the same general pursuits, in such a vast extent of country.—America is the theatre where human nature, in all probability, will receive her last and principal literary, civil and military honours.

It is generally agreed, that property of whatsoever kind, ought to bear its proportional part of the taxes, why then should cash be neglected? I would desire to recommend it to my fellow-citizens and farmers, either through their committees or otherwise, to petition the Legislatures, praying them to petition Congress to call in all the money they have emitted once every two or three years, and let it bear a tax of Two-pence per dollar per year, at the least. Let new emissions be ready for exchange, so that the poor may not want their money: here assessing and collecting is easily performed at the same time. I conceive this mode would give credit to the currency, and may be necessary, because of counterfeits, once in three years. This, my countrymen, is a tax easily paid, equal upon all, and can be demanded of none, but what are able to pay: there is no method so equitable and easy as to tax cash, in order to extricate ourselves from so enormous a debt; therefore, no trouble too great to accomplish it.

Salus populi Suprema lex.

A FARMER.

Mr. COLLINS,

I Have accidentally [met] with the general orders of our amiable Commander in Chief, of the 29th of July last; an extract from which will, I am persuaded, be highly agreeable to your readers.

Extract from General Orders.

Head-Quarters, Moore's House, July 29, 1779.

'MANY and pointed orders have been issued against that unmeaning and abominable custom of swearing;¹ notwithstanding which, with much regret, the General observes it prevails, if possible, more than ever: his feelings are continually wounded by the oaths and imprecations of the soldiers, whenever he is in hearing of them.

'The name of that Being, from whose bountiful goodness we are permitted to exist, and enjoy the comforts of life, is incessantly imprecated and profaned, in a manner as wanton as it is shocking. For the sake, therefore, of religion, decency and order, the General hopes and trusts, that officers of every rank will use their influence and authority to check a vice, which is as unprofitable, as it is wicked and shameful. If the officers would make it an unavoidable rule to reprimand, and if that does not do, to punish soldiers for offences of this kind, it would not fail of having the desired effect.'

TRENTON, NOVEMBER 17.

From a New-York paper dated November 8, we have extracted the following:

"London, July 24. A commission has passed the Great Seal appointing General Sir Henry Clinton, K. B. to be the sole Commissioner to treat, consult, and agree upon the means of quieting the disorders now subsisting in certain of the colonies, plantations and provinces of North-America, and the said commission is dispatched from the Secretary of State's office, to be forwarded to the General by the Anna Theresa Packet, now lying under sailing orders at Falmouth, for New-York."

A gentleman from Elizabethtown informs, that the enemy, to the number of 8000, have embarked, and part of them sailed, supposed to be bound to South-Carolina, or the West-Indies.

Count D'Estaing, altho' he has not been successful at Savannah, yet he has made a most powerful diversion in our favour, by keeping the British mercenaries at New-York, and its dependencies, with a train of tories and refugees, constantly harrassed in throwing up various works, and sinking vessels in the Narrows and at the Hook, they being in daily expectation of his arrival there for two months past; but the vessels which they sunk, have chiefly drifted away with the current.—Should Parker's fleet, from the West-Indies, be upon our coast, as is reported, the Count may yet give the tyrant of Britain a blow in that quarter of the world.

On Sunday evening last died in the neighbourhood of this place, THOMAS CADWALADER, Esquire, late an eminent Physician of Philadelphia, in the 72d year of his age, universally regretted by his acquaintances and friends.¹

Elizabeth Meyers, Oct. 8, 1793; he was a potter; he was an assistant alderman, New York, 1802-3-4.

- II. Willem, bap. Sept. 26, 1731. He was a potter in New York. He and his brother John were witnesses to the will of John Remmi, of New York, "Pot baker," Jan. 26, 1762. He was admitted to the burgher right of the city Sept. 1, 1770. He subsequently removed to Middle Brook, New Jersey, perhaps because his sympathies were with the Americans, rather than with the British, who were then in possession of New York City. He d. at persians, black edgings, sewing silks, Barcelona handkerchiefs, best Kenting handkerchiefs, ribbands, taste, broad and shoe bindings, twist of different colours; gilt, metal, death-head and basket buttons; coloured, white and cotton threads; rice, sugar, alspice, pepper, indigo, snuff and tobacco; shoe, knee and stock buckles, with many other articles too tedious to mention.

Middle Brook in 1779. William Crollus, "formerly of the city of New York, but now of Middle Brook, Somerset county, New Jersey," being "infirm," made his will Jan. 26, 1778, which was proved Jan. 22, 1779. He mentions no wife nor children. He devises to his nephew John, son of his brother John, the rest of the term of the lease of those four lots situate in the outward of the city of New York, leased of George Janeway, with dwelling-houses, shops, &c., and all his tools, &c., of the potter's business; to his brothers John, Peter and George the proceeds of sale of his other house and ground in New York City, near the Moravian Meeting House, in Fare street, and his lot and house in Middle Brook, New Jersey, and the rest of his estate. With a proper recognition of the pending struggle of the American people to secure their own freedom, he provided that his slaves Tom and wife Venus and their children should be freed. He appoints as executors his friend George Janeway, and his brothers John and Peter. Witnesses—Robert Manely, Benjamin Harris, Jun., and William Wilcocks.—Liber No. 21 of N. J. Wills, f. 53.

III. Maria.

- IV. Petrus, bap. Feb. 11, 1736; m. by license, Jan. 5, 1763, Mary Chambers. In the record of the baptisms of their children, however, her name is given as Lack, Loch, or Lock. She was, perhaps, a widow when he married her. Peter Crollus, cordwainer, was granted the burgher right, Oct. 1, 1765. Children: 1. Willem, bap. Nov. 27, 1763 (the child's paternal grandparents both witnessed the baptism); 2. Elizabet, bap. April 28, 1765; 3. Veronica, bap. June 22, 1766; 4. Mary, bap. Nov. 13, 1768; 5. Elizabet, bap. Oct. 7, 1770; 6. Peter, bap. Nov. 8, 1772; d. in inf.; Pieter, bap. Oct. 30, 1774. Peter Crollus, son of Willem, and father of these children, joined the Reformed Dutch Church of New Brunswick by certificate in 1778.
- V. Jurrle, bap. March 5, 1738; m. Catharina Coelbach in 1763 or earlier. This is doubtless the brother "George" mentioned in the will of William Crollus. As a matter of fact, "Jurrle" (pronounced Yury) is a contraction of Juriaan, the Dutch for Urian. The Dutch equivalent of George is Joris, pronounced Yoris.—W. N.

Trenton, Nov. 17.

¹ Jonathan Richmond, of Nottingham township, Burlington county, bought from Elisha Lawrence, of Upper Freehold, Monmouth county, by deed, dated October 1, 1774, for the consideration of £250, a message and lot of land, situate in Kingsbury (now in the southern part of Trenton, immediately south of the Assumpink), Burlington county, "called Lott 3 in plan of the town: Beginning at a post at the east side of the Broad Street that leads from the Mills towards Crosswicks and corner to Lott 2; thence along that Lott north fifty-six degrees east one hundred and eighty-one and one-half feet to another post for a corner, being also a corner of Lott No. 2; thence south thirty-four degrees east sixty feet to a post, corner of Lott 4; then along said Lott south fifty-six degrees west one hundred and eighty-one and one-half feet to a post at the East side of the Broad Street and is also another corner to Lott 4; thence along the east side of said Street north thirty-four degrees west sixty feet to the beginning; being one-quarter of an acre." Witnesses—Benjamin Yard, Thos: Yard.—N. J. Deeds, Liber AM., p. 21. "Across the Queen Street bridge on the east side was the site of Mahlon Stacy's flour mill, built in 1680, of hewn logs. In 1714 Wm. Trent purchased the property and built a two story building, a mill. Geo. Bright had a bakery next to it, and lived opposite. Next to this bakery was Jonathan Richmond's 'True American Inn,' built in 1760, the headquarters of Gen. Washington for the first two days of 1777, but which he was obliged to abandon on the afternoon of January 2d. This building was destroyed by fire in 1843.—Stryker's "Trenton Hundred Years Ago," p. 20. Jonathan Richmond was a barrack-master at Trenton during the Revolutionary War; it is not known how long he held that office. On October 27, 1788, being "weak," Jonathan Richmond, of Nottingham township, Burlington county, made his will, which was proved at Burlington, April 8, 1789. He gave to his wife Emmy one-third of his estate, and to his niece Sallie James, daughter of his sister Mary Watley, 20s; to his nephew, Samuel Wooley, son of his sister Catharine Wooley, the rest of his estate. Executor—nephew, Samuel Wooley. Witnesses—C. Higbie, Abraham Woglaam and Rensellaer Williams.—W. N.

FLAXSEED WANTED.

FOR which the highest price will be given by JOHN REYNOLDS¹ in Trenton, who also gives the highest price for any quantity of HORSE or COWS TAILS, suitable for making hair ropes.

¹ A petition was presented to the Provincial Congress of New Jersey, June 21, 1776, "from John Reynolds and George Riche, paper makers in Germantown, Pennsylvania, settling forth, that they design to carry on their trade in this Colony, and praying that this Congress would encourage the same." The petition was read, and ordered to have a second reading, which it received on July 4, when action was "deferred for further consideration."—Minutes, 469, 490. The subject is not mentioned again in the minutes. However, Reynolds, at least, located in Trenton, for the records of conveyances show that John Reynolds, paper maker, of Trenton, bought from Israel Morris, of the same place, gentleman, son and heir of William Morris, late of Trenton; Esq., deceased, by deed dated June 1, 1778, for £350, a lot situate on the east side of King street, Trenton, touching the late Thomas Smith's land, and land of Israel Morris, being part of a larger tract granted to William Morris by William Trent, April 16, 1745. On September 23, 1778, he bought from Israel Morris, for £1400, three lots in Trenton, as follows: "1st lot: Beginning at the southwest corner of Friends' Burying Ground, running thence north to William Tucker's land, thence along Tucker's land west to lot of the Presbyterian congregation, along that south to the street leading to the Quaker Meeting house, thence along said street east to the beginning, containing one acre. 2d lot: Beginning at a corner of the street opposite to said Meeting house and running along the street leading thereto west to the Abraham Cottnam estate, thence along his line south to the Presbyterian Burying Ground, thence along the same to Samuel Tucker's garden lot east and then south to the road leading to Samuel Henry's Mill, then along said road east to the back street, and along said street north to the beginning, containing two acres. 3d lot: Beginning at the southwest corner of Joseph Higbee's land on Meeting-house lane or back street, thence along his line east to other land of Samuel Tucker, then along Tucker's line to a corner of another lot of said Tucker, then west by the same and Ellhu Spencer and Samuel Henry to said Meeting house lane, then along the same north to the beginning, containing 17 acres." He sold these three lots, his wife Catharine joining in the deed, May 28, 1779, to Joseph Milnor, of Trenton, merchant, for £2325. No will of John Reynolds has been found on record in New Jersey. It is not unlikely that after he sold these lands in Trenton, he removed from the State.

The records of the Adjutant General's office show that one John Reynolds was a private of the Hunterdon county militia during the Revolutionary war, and that he received in 1784 a certificate for the depreciation of his Continental pay, which amounted to £8:5. It is not at all likely that this was the papermaker of Trenton.—W. N.

PHILADELPHIA, November 11.

Nov. 18. We are assured from good authority, that the States of New-Hampshire, Massachusetts-Bay, Rhode-Island, Connecticut and New-York, have lately met in Convention at Hartford, for the purpose of considering of a general regulation of prices, which is considered by them as practicable under the late resolution of Congress for stopping the presses and procuring supplies by regular and steady taxation. They have proposed to the several States as far as Virginia inclusive, to meet in a General Convention for the above purpose, and to consider of other measures for the restoration of public credit, in this city, on the first Wednesday in January next.—From the late circular letter sent by the State of New-Jersey, there is little doubt but that State will accede to the proposition,—and it is most probable, Commissioners will be appointed from this State, which will comprehend seven States of the Union.

WHEREAS, the British Commissary of Prisoners by letter to me, dated the 12th of October last, has required “the immediate return of all officers or persons admitted by them to parole.” I am hereby to direct, that strict attention and compliance be paid to this summons, and that they return to the city of New-York, without further delay.

Given at my office, at the headquarters of the army, this 8th day of November, 1779.

¹ Adjutant General Brelnthall, of New Jersey, reports that Samuel H. Sullivan was Quartermaster at Trenton by a return from March 2, 1778, to March 2, 1779, under the immediate supervision of Moore Furman, Deputy Quartermaster General of New Jersey. The Adjutant General has no record of Mr. Sullivan's service as barrackmaster, but it appears by the newspaper advertisement in 1779 that he had formerly held that position. Mr. Sullivan died intestate in 1782. His mother, Margaret Sullivan, and his eldest daughter, Margaret Sullivan, renounced their right to administer, on August 9, 1782, Gerrit Gerritson and Henry Post witnessing their renunciation. Thereupon Abraham Demott, yeoman, of Somerset county, was appointed administrator, August 13, 1782, Henry Post going on his bond. Witnesses—William Paterson and Gerrit Garritson. The inventory of the estate of Samuel Harriot Sullivan, of Reading township, Hunterdon county, taken August 10, 1782, was appraised by Gerrit Garritson and Henry Post at £113-12-10.—W. N.

Mr. COLLINS,

YOUR 93d Number has brought the Performance of your Correspondent the True Patriot, who has embellished his monstrous production with ornaments of Billingsgate eloquence and Grubstreet rhetoric, in which polite improvements he appears to have made no inconsiderable proficiency: I shall therefore not presume to approach his immensity, with the first attempt of a young genius in that way, being no way ambitious of distinguishing myself in that most noble art, the art of calumny.—

His writings, however, must convince the world, that he has made a convert of himself, and that he is willing to part with his money according to his own plan, that is, to retain one fifteenth or one twentieth of the nominal sum as original value, which sufficiently proves that he received his money so, long before a majority of his more virtuous countrymen did; and if he has no money, he is a very improper person to dispose of other peoples: he says my charge against him is, that he recommended an unjust and impolitic plan that depreciated the currency; and as his powerful motive to trouble the press is, that he perceived I had borrowed this charge from the general talk of persons too much actuated by self-interest, sinister views, and prejudicing the community against his favourite plan, which he calls the most just, equitable and salutary.

First. As to the depreciation of the currency, the more virtuous part of the community sold at a much lower rate than twenty for one, which he imprudently was at so much pains to prove in the publick papers, was about the standard at that time; this being premised, if his writings answered any purpose, it effectually answered the purpose of bringing them all up to it, others refused to sell at any price, and if the engrosser and forestaller were actuated by self-interest, his plan would naturally cause them to ask twenty times as much as they sold at before, otherwise their expectations could not be answered. In a word, to go about to prove his writings to have a tendency to depreciate our money, is like holding a candle to the sun; and as to his plan being most just, equitable and salutary, the contrary of which is self-evident.—Does the Patriot know, that a large majority of the people, who have opposed the enemy in the field, sold their property to support our army, and received their pay in continental money when as good as specie? No: he appears a stranger to this: I presume he is none of those kind of patriots, who oppose the enemy in the field. Does the Patriot know, that there are still among us a number, who ought to be denominated Tories, who never opposed the enemy in the field, and have sold none of their property to support our army, or otherwise, because they would take none of our money? who, by his plan, would remain as rich as they used to be; and the others, on whom the temporal salvation of the United States in a great measure, under God, depends, doomed to beggary. Behold the most just, equitable and salutary plan, recommended by that piddling politician! Is it a secret to him alone, that the bills of credit, through the recommendation of Congress, have been made a lawful tender in payment of money, equal to silver and gold, by the several Legislatures in union; and that there are thousands, who have paid their debts with it, who had received silver and gold? Is it most just, equitable and salutary, that such should retain only a twentieth part thereof? I do not hesitate to pronounce his plan a recommendation of abominable robbery, notwithstanding his being possessed of so much incoherence and self-sufficiency, as to grace it with the specious name of a tax: and as the money has been made a lawful tender by the several Legislatures in union, as I have before observed, and whereas the True Patriot has recommended it to the different Legislatures to pass seasonable laws, (in his 6th Number, as published in your Gazette Number 74) that no one of the citizens shall be obliged to receive payment for debts contracted before the year 1777, in this depreciated currency, Quere, Does he mean that they are to be paid in gold or silver? or that they are to receive twenty times the sum in this same depreciated currency? the latter of which, I suppose to be what he intends. Previous to such a law, I should be glad if the True Patriot would also, for the preservation of equity and justice, recommend to the different States other seasonable laws, having regard to all those, who received the money before such seasonable laws were passed, and all those who sold their lands at moderate prices, disposed of their property for the use of the army, or otherwise confiding in the publick faith, and received their money when as good as specie; in short, all those who possess their estates in cash at original value, (not forgetting those whose original value itself is melting, and melted away) and do not come within the classes of his exempts: this indeed appears something difficult, but make no doubt his fruitful invention, fondness for novelty, superior abilities, great wisdom, and above all his love of justice, will enable him to fix a plan to do equal justice to every person.

It seems to me, if he had recommended a plan in favour of such innocent sufferers, instead of the seasonable laws for debts contracted before the year 1777, and now unpaid, it would have been more just, equitable and salutary; it would have sufficiently served the purpose of those, who had their money yet to receive, if he had recommended a repeal of those laws by which the money was made a legal tender, which would finish the whole at once, and no doubt finally would have answered the design of our True Patriot: but as I mean not to inflame or exaggerate matters, but try them by those feelings and affections which nature justifies, to have said nothing against a plan which justice and reason forbids, and my affections, wounded through a thousand pores, instruct me to detest, is madness and folly; a plan big with mischief, a burlesque to the name of Patriot, that recommends not only the most flagrant and wanton violation of the publick faith, but is destructive to the primary obligations of nature and society.

From henceforth I mean not to take any notice of the performance of that banditti, who, I presume, compose the iniquitous writings of the True Patriot, who profess such a disregard to equity, such contempt of order, such stupid blindness to future consequences, as must immediately have the most tragical conclusion, and must terminate in the destruction of the greater number, and in a total dissolution of society to the rest.

And, finally, to put an end to the evils his or their writings have or may occasion, I beg my fellow-citizens and farmers to read with the attention it deserves the address from Congress to their constituents, part of which is as follows:

“It is with great regret and reluctance, that we can prevail upon ourselves to take the least notice of a question, which involves in it a doubt so injurious to the honour and dignity of America. The enemy, aware that the strength of America lay in the union of her citizens, and the wisdom and integrity of those to whom they committed the directions of their affairs, have taken unwearied pains to disunite and alarm the people, to depreciate the abilities and virtue of their rulers, and to impair the confidence reposed in them by their constituents. To this end, repeated attacks have been made to draw an absurd and fanciful line of distinction between the Congress and the people, and to create an opinion and a belief, that their interest and views were different and opposed. Hence the ridiculous tales, the invidious insinuations, and the whimsical suspicions that have been forged and propagated by disguised emissaries, and traitors in the garb of patriots. Hence has proceeded that notable discovery, that as the Congress made the money, they also can destroy it; and that it will “exist no longer than they find it convenient to permit it. It is not “surprising that, in a free country, where the tongues and pens of “such people are and must be licensed, such political heresies should “be inculcated and diffused; but it is really astonishing that the “mind of a single virtuous citizen in America should be influenced “by them.”

Hence then, my brave fellow-citizens and farmers, let us rely on the virtue of our rulers; let us cheerfully comply with the requisitions of Congress; let us no longer heighten our calamity by furnishing the means by which we suffer; the exorbitant prices of the necessaries of life, &c. my delicacy prevents me to mention: these matters I leave to the wisdom of Congress and the Legislatures, hoping they will see the necessity of laws to regulate speedily our trade, and that the most equitable mode of taxation may be adopted. It is well known that numbers who have immense sums of money, are paying no tax at all; to catch these runaways, will require the attention of the Legislature; and in lieu of the more virtuous part of the community’s indemnifying the Tories estates, I would recommend the mode of Virginia, where persons who breathe the air of liberty, and do not deserve pay for it.

That the Congress and Legislatures will interfere to bring about a happy change in our affairs, is the cordial prayer of the publick’s sincere, well-wishing friend.

A FARMER.

Mr. COLLINS,

I F any of the thoughts in the following essay should be deemed worthy the attention of the publick, you are welcome to communicate them through the channel of your paper.

HONESTUS.

THE disorders in our finances have given birth to an innumerable multitude of essays. Every one has a favourite scheme of his own to propose; the adoption of which will infallibly effect a cure. Encouraged by the example of others, I shall venture to throw out to the consideration of the publick, a few observations on this momentous subject; trusting, that should my notions prove erroneous, I shall experience the same indulgence, that has been so liberally granted to the mistakes of others.

Much has been said in favour of regulation—and indeed the advocates for it appear so numerous, and promise such good effects from it, that it is with the utmost diffidence I oppose it; was it not that, placing too great confidence for relief on this remedy, we might possibly be diverted from pursuing other means, with that earnestness and assiduity, which the present exigency requires—was it not, I say, for this consideration, I should have remained silent on the subject.

It is allowed on all hands that the value of a circulating medium is merely relative. Were it possible, for instance, to convey, by some magic trick, into the pockets of every individual, throughout these United States, a sum of money equal to what he before possessed, would any one, I would ask, be one whit the richer for it?—Certainly not. It is a fact confirmed by woeful experience, that the value of money will always be proportionate to the quantity in circulation.

Let us suppose that, at the commencement of the war, the whole sum in circulation amounted to thirty millions of dollars, and that a regulation had been established at the then current prices of commodities. By a computation from the tables, I find that the annual expenditure requires nearly the whole sum in circulation. In four years therefore it would have been necessary to have emitted nearly four times that sum, that is one hundred and twenty millions; but, to obviate all objections, let us say sixty millions. If the principles above laid down are well founded, the money would then be reduced to two thirds of its former value, that is, a dollar would be really worth but half a crown.

The money thus circumstanced, I say in the first place, that it would be impossible to enforce a regulation, where it was so manifestly the interest of every one to break it; and in the next place, that every attempt at enforcing it, would necessarily tend to depreciate it: for when people found they could not obtain a just value in money for their commodities, they would naturally have recourse to barter—and in proportion as the money ceased to circulate, its value would be diminished. And though we might still be able to extort for the use of the army at the regulated prices, yet as these prices would be so disproportionate to the real value of commodities, the obtaining supplies in this mode would be neither more nor less than a tax upon those who furnished them. A tax, in every point of view, the most odious that could be invented. From this exposition of the matter, it appears evident to me, that regulation, instead of fixing the value of the money, has a direct tendency to accelerate the depreciation of it by causing it to stagnate.

To go into a regulation, at this time, with a view to prevent the farther depreciation of the money, would, in my apprehension of the matter, be madness in extreme. Not a proposition in all Euclid's elements is more clearly demonstrable, than that the value of a circulating medium must ever be in a direct ratio to the quantity of trade or goods bought and sold. Now there are but four possible ways, by which this ratio can be affected.

First—Increasing the quantity of trade.

Secondly—Decreasing the quantity of medium.

Thirdly—Decreasing the quantity of trade.

Fourthly—Increasing the quantity of medium.

By the two first the medium is said to be appreciated: by the two latter it is said to be depreciated. But there is another way, you will say, of causing the medium to depreciate, and that is, when, through a want of confidence, the circulation of it becomes cramped; and a part of the trade is carried on by barter, or some other means. But this, with respect to the medium, is undoubtedly decreasing the quantity of trade.

Let us now try, by the test of these principles, how regulation would operate towards appreciating or fixing the value of our paper money. There are, as I have just now said, but two possible ways of doing this. First, decreasing the quantity of medium: or, secondly, increasing the quantity or objects of trade. But regulation, so far from affecting either, has a direct contrary tendency.

The money at present, let us say, is depreciated forty prices of what it was in 1774; and a regulating law passes, fixing it at twenty. "Bravo!" say your advocates for regulation, "here is an immediate appreciation of the money to double its value."

This way of gaining property by creation, is to be sure a most charming invention. I have 4000 dollars, which, at the present rate of money, will purchase me 100 bushels of wheat. But by the magic power of regulation, I am enabled in an instant, with my 4000 dollars, to purchase 200 bushels of wheat.—Now, unless this additional 100 bushels of wheat have been created for me, by the almighty power of regulation, I certainly put a trick upon my neighbour; and defraud him of so much of his property. But the truth is, that my neighbour, if he has any sense, will not suffer himself to become the dupe of this legerdemain. "No," he would say, "you shall have the wheat, but give me the value of it."

In short, no man, who is not an arrant blockhead, will part with his property at half its value. Barter, or the use of some other medium, will be substituted in the room of paper money; which, notwithstanding all the laws that can be made, will depreciate in proportion as it ceases to circulate.

But why regulate now? Have not Congress stopped the sluices of depreciation, by declaring they will emit no more money. The quantity of money can be no farther increased; nothing then can cause it to depreciate, but a decrease of trade, or, in other words, contracting the circulation of it. "But at the present enormous prices, sufficient supplies cannot be raised; therefore a reduction of prices becomes necessary; and there is no other way to effect this but by regulation." This argument is really too ridiculous to deserve a serious answer; and yet it is the only one I have heard in favour of regulation. In the name of common sense, let us learn to reason on this subject independent of paper money. It is a sufficient supply of provisions, cloathing, ammuniton, &c. we want. Whether the quantity of pasteboard, which serves to represent this provision, cloathing, ammuniton, &c. be increased or diminished, it matters not one jot. Let us appreciate, or depreciate it, to what degree we please, it signifies nothing. The aggregate sum of the one will still be the same, whatever changes the other may be made to undergo.—The pasteboard in itself is indeed of no value. Let us put what figures we please upon the face of it, it will still be of no more value than pasteboard, unless we have power to make it represent something that is of value. Will the farmers proportion of the expence of the war cost him one, bushel of wheat more or less, whether we estimate it at 20 or 40 dollars per bushel? Regulation may impose on the unwary, but can neither increase the quantity, nor diminish the consumption of commodities.

HONESTUS.

TRENTON, DECEMBER 1.

Congress, we learn, have recommended it to the several Legislatures of the United States to pass regulating Acts, to take place on the first day of February next—and that they have negociated a loan with the Court of France and the States of Holland to a very considerable amount. The good effects of these important strokes of policy, will we flatter ourselves, soon be felt, as they will doubtless put our finances and our army upon a very respectable footing.

Since our last Colonel Washington, with about 160 Light Dragoons, passed through this place on their way to Bristol, where they will wait for further orders.

The Legislature of this State have agreed to raise a Tax of Nine Millions of Dollars, to be collected in two payments, one by the first day of May, and the other by the first day of September next.

—New-Jersey Gazette, Vol. II., No. 101, Dec. 1, 1779.

New-York, December 1.

Copy of a letter from a Gentleman in Jersey to his friend in this City.

Dear Sir,

HAVING determined at all events, to risque the conveying a letter to you with the particulars of a very diverting scene, which happened yesterday at Governor Livingston's house, I hope this may come safe to your hands.

It may, perhaps, be necessary to inform you in the first place, although I imagine you must have seen it in our papers, that the Congress have recommended it to the several States, to set apart the ninth day of December, as a day of thanksgiving to the Lord, for that he hath prospered the arms of the Americans, and of their good and great Ally the French King. In consequence of which recommendation, our Governor had by proclamation, ordered it to be observed in this State; and vast quantities of turkies, ducks, geese, &c. were cooped for the purpose:

But on the arrival of Major Clarkson* with the doleful news of the total defeat of the Americans and their Allies, in an attempt to storm the British lines at Savannah, the Governor must, from what followed, have thought that the recommendation from Congress, and his own Proclamation not only premature, but too palpable to impose even on the most ignorant; for the very next day after Mr. Clarkson passed here on his way to Gen. Washington, the Governor summoned all the neighbouring clergy to meet in consultation at his house, on the twenty-fourth inst. On their coming together he informed them that he had thought of revoking his proclamation relative to celebrating a day of thanksgiving; and instead thereof, to appoint a day for fasting and prayer; for that the prospect was now greatly changed, and that he would be glad to have their opinions. A long silence ensued, and each of these Reverend Divines seemed greatly distressed at the Governor's proposal, as it tended to deprive them of a good dinner, (which they seldom meet with) and which on these occasions they levy on their parishoners. By the method these self denying gentry pursue in sending notes to all the Deacons in their respectable parishes, fixing different hours for their dining, they never fail of refreshing themselves with a good meal four or five times on the same day, and of embracing those opportunities of administering comfort to such of their female parishoners, who from their peculiar zeal and affection for the Clergy, prefer these private visitations, to an attendance on public devotion.

At length one of these reverend teachers, (named Richards) whether from principle, or the love of good eating, I can't say, put an end to their silence, by declaring to the Governor, that he was determined his congregation should celebrate the day, with great joy and thanksgiving; for he was of opinion that the Lord had wonderfully delivered their country from the French King; who he said it evidently appeared, from the demand made by the Count d'Estaing at Georgia, intended to have held it as a part of his dominions, in case he had defeated the British troops; and that he was now convinced that whatever part of the United States the French should get possession of, would be lost forever to the Americans.

This bold declaration of Mr. Richards seemed to have great effect upon his brethren, and although they did not declare their sentiments in the decisive manner he had done, yet they said it was a strange demand; that the people were alarmed; that it was very necessary matters should be explained; that if the country was to be taken from them, the alliance appeared to be dangerous rather than beneficial; that if the King of France was to rule them, they would be obliged to take their religion from him; that the prospect was very melancholy; taxes intolerable, their paper money not worth counting; that millions of their dollars were counterfeit; the necessaries of life not to be had; that great numbers of the inhabitants and chief part of the army subsisted by rapine and plunder, to effect which they often committed murder; and that these were likely to be the only fruits of all their struggles for liberty—For they now plainly saw, if their country was wrested from one King, it would be immediately seized by another; that they could wish the terms offered by the British Commissioners had been accepted, for that they would have made them as independent and happy as could possibly be desired, and have secured their religion and liberties against the attacks of every power.

His Excellency (which you will hardly believe), remained silent, and his thoughts seemed to have taken a flight to some other region, and it is said there appeared strong symptoms in his countenance, either that he was affected with these important truths, or that he was in deep law-cogitation how to evade the force of them.

reply from the Governor, and observing that he was so lost in thought, as not to pay the least attention to them, were about to depart without further ceremony; and accordingly ordered their horses.—The Governor's son, who acts as his private Secretary, thought it advisable, in order to prevent an affront to the Clergy, to rouse his father from this state of absence, and giving him a jog, said, Sir, the gentlemen's horses are coming.—The sudden sound in his ear occasioned as sudden a start from his chair, and the cry of my horse—my horse.—Upon this outcry, some of the clergy immediately took to their heels, supposing he had meant his horse whip, and that they were to undergo the discipline of it, for having delivered their thoughts so freely; whilst others of them, concluding that the poor Governor had either lost his senses, or was under strong political conviction, caught hold of him, in order to prevent his doing himself an injury.

The family who were in the adjoining room, observing the precipitate flight of some of the clergy; and being alarmed with the noise in the Governor's apartment, immediately rushed in, to discover what was the matter. The increase of numbers tended greatly to increase the Governor's phrenzy, and nothing but the utmost exertion of force, kept him from leaping out of one of the windows. His Lady's voice at length prevailed; for being assured by her, that there were none about him but his friends, he was more composed, and reproached his son as being the means of throwing him into so disagreeable a situation.—The young man conscious that what he had done was purely from a motive of politeness, and unwilling to remain under the displeasure of his father, assured him that he must have misapprehended his words.—The Governor, not satisfied with his son's declaration, insisted upon his repeating the words that had given rise to his uneasiness, upon which he told his father, that observing that the gentlemen were about to depart, and perceiving that he did not appear to be sensible of it, he thought the most decent way to give him a hint of it was, by saying their horses were coming.—Is it possible replied his Excellency, that I could have been so mistaken? I really thought said he, that you called out Simcoe's horse were coming; and you all know, said his Excellency, what a direful dilemma I was reduced to on their late appearance in this neighbourhood.—He then explained largely, on the very ridiculous manner of carrying on the war in sudden excursions, and informed the company that the greatest heroes had their hours of diffidence, and that unfortunately for him, he had often been surprised in those unlucky moments, and therefore he hoped it would be an excuse for the present perturbation of his mind; for that he always found upon recollection on these occasions, that he wanted not that resolution, which was necessary for the defense of his country, and the support of the glorious cause of liberty and independence.—Being thus recovered from his dreadful apprehensions of Simcoe's horse, he proceeded to make some reply to the clergymen who remained: and after many apologies for what had happened, he told them that although he must confess, the demand made by d'Estaing of a surrender of Georgia to the arm of France, tended to alarm the fears of the ignorant he was of opinion that he had acted agreeable to law.—For that a case in point had struck him, the consideration of which had taken up his whole attention, and thrown him into a state of absence, at the very time when his son had imprudently, by an unguarded expression alarmed his fears.

He then informed them that it was a parallel case with that of a mortgage entering upon the mortgager without foreclosing the equity of redemption: And that as the United States owed an immense debt to France, it was but reasonable that whatever part of the United States France should enter upon ought to be held by them until their debt was paid, when he hoped they would surrender it again to the States. The Governor's law point it seemed rather increased the fears of these gospel teachers; for Mr.

Richards, who was one of those that remained, appeared apprehensive that the Comte might on his arrival here enter the coops of his parishoners and hold the poultry that were fattening for the day of thanksgiving to his own use and behoof: For he declared to the Governor, that if he intended to support the Comte with such points of law, he should pray most devoutly that the Comte might not enter his parish, until the thanksgiving day was past, on which day he intended to make his entries in such a manner, as not to leave the Comte even a tythe. The Governor it is said, appeared rather displeas'd at this declaration, and in a sullen tone told them, that he had discharged his duty, and that he left them to follow the dictates of their consciences, upon which they parted.

It would surprize you to hear the people in general here deliver their sentiments since Clarkson's arrival from Georgia. They make not the least scruple of declaring publickly that the Congress have sold them to France, and that d'Estaing should be the first man whom they would put to death, if he was to make his appearance among them.

You may rest assured that Congress are heartily sick of their bargain, and that the perfidy of the French nation, always practis'd with every other power is constantly staring them in the face; and I am confident they fervently wish that their constituents would afford them a plausible pretence of dissolving themselves; for they are now convinced that all their schemes of power and independance are vanished, and that Great Britain is the only power to whom their religion and liberties can be intrusted; may Heaven grant that she may again take us under her protection.

I am with great regard,

Yours, &c.

New-Jersey, 25th November 1779.

We are told that General Washington is to canton his army this winter in the county of Morris, in New-Jersey, between the town of Morris, and that of Mendem.—The Royal Gazette, No. 331, December 1, 1779.

Mr. Washington, Chief Commander of the rebel forces, some days ago, on his passage over Hudson's River, underwent a very painful and memorable emersion, from the oversetting of his boat: and continued three quarters of an hour in agonizing struggle for the preservation of his life.

Mr. Washington finding the North River element too austere for his constitution, has, with his suite, adjourned to Morris.—The Royal Gazette, No. 332, December 4, 1779.

CHATHAM, Nov. 30.

Several of the inhabitants of Morris county were last week apprehended and secured in goal, for counterfeiting and passing the continental bills of credit.

NEW-YORK, Decem. 6.

Advices from the Country since our last are, That General Washington and Mr. Mead,¹ his Aid de Camp, and his Adjutant General,² were near being drowned last Saturday Week, by the oversetting of a Whale Boat at a Place called Sandy-Point, on Hudson's River; that all the Army, but a Garrison of 1200 left at West Point, are marching down the Country in Division[s] under their proper Generals, supposed for Morris County; and 'tis conjectured they will hut this Winter either in Morris Town the Notch below Passaic Falls,³ or the Mountain in the Rear of Mr. Kemble's; the Army has been short of Flour for some Time past on Account of the Dryness of the Season; Mr. Jacob Arnold's House, in Morris-Town, is taken for General Sullivan's Head Quarters for the Winter, as General Washington is to reside at Philadelphia until Spring;

² General Joseph Reed.

³ The Great Notch, below the Little Falls and above the Great Falls of the Passaic—about three or four miles above Paterson.

Lord Stirling has declined going to the Southward, and 'tis imagined General Wayne will be appointed to that Command, and the Troops destined for South Carolina are, the Virginia and North Carolina Men, with Baller's Light-Horse; Col. Dayton will relieve Col. Seely at Elizabeth-Town in a few Days; and Col. Spencer takes Post at Woodbridge; and General Washington's best Train of Artillery is at Sucesunney, above Morris Town; a Number of the Eastern Men are to be hutted on the East Side of the North River under the Command of General Gates. —The New-York Gazette: and the Weekly Mercury, No. 1468, December 6, 1779.

A Single worked POCKET BOOK bound with yellow ferreting, and tied with a string of the same fastened to it: Had in it about 2500 dollars and an ivory small tooth comb. Whoever finds the said picket-book, and brings it to Samuel Cooper, or to the Coffee-house, in Philadelphia, with the money and writings lost in it, shall have Five Hundred Dollars Reward, paid by

Mr. COLLINS,

THE freedom with which I expose the futility of regulation in your last paper will, no doubt, draw upon me the resentment of some of its redoubtable champions. I wish it may—as I am fully persuaded, nothing is wanting to convince my countrymen of its inefficacy, but a full and candid discussion.

Regulation is indeed a solecism in politics;—in three words I prove it: let A stand for the quantity of trade, that is, the quantity of goods bought and sold; let B stand for the quantity of money, or circulating medium, necessary to carry on that trade; then consequently $A=B$: but regulation would make $A=^2B=^3B$, &c. &c. than which what can be a greater absurdity?

But a gentleman, who stiles himself a True Patriot, has hit upon a most notable expedient to extricate us from our difficulties. Let us, says he, call in all the money, and give in return one dollar for twenty: but I would ask, what is to be done then? Is the same scene of iniquity to be again repeated—are thousands again to be ruined by a second inundation of paper money?—surely not. Indeed, could we suppose Congress wicked enough to make this experiment, happily they would find it impracticable, and if impracticable I would repeat the question, what is to be done then? Indeed it is not easy to conceive, how the mere alteration of certain characters, impressed on the face of a piece of pasteboard, could relieve us of any part of the burden, which the support of the war necessarily brings upon us. The figures on the pasteboard are mere types. It is the realities, which these figures are made to represent, that support our army. The proportion of this burden, to a moderate farmer, we will say, is ten bushels of wheat annually, or as many pieces of pasteboard, as will represent ten bushels of wheat. Now, in the name of common sense, of what consequence is it to the farmer, what sort of figures we choose to put on these pieces of pasteboard: but, says the True Patriot, we shall get rid of an immense load of debt by it.

Now, should we even admit, that the paper emitted by Congress is really a debt on the publick, which is by no means admissable, this certainly would not be the most honourable way of discharging it: but, for my part, I am perfectly at a loss to divine, in what this great debt consists. Whatever has been borrowed in France, or in any other foreign country, I readily grant, is really a debt upon the United States: but, in order to prove we have incurred no debt by the enormous quantity of paper issued by Congress, I would only ask this simple question; if, instead of issuing paper, Congress had levied the supplies in kind, would we, as United States, have been made either richer or poorer by the war, than we are at present?—certainly not. In short a small degree of attention to this subject will suffice to convince us, that it is not possible, by any kind of artifice or contrivance whatsoever, to anticipate the future recourses of a State, by foreign loans: and however an internal debt may be contracted, whether by limitation of prices, depreciation of the medium, or by actual loans from individuals, it is not the debt of the whole community, but merely of one part thereof to another. However singular this doctrine may appear, I am persuaded, on due consideration, it will be found to be just.

The expences of the war has hitherto been constantly defrayed by every man who has received paper-money; the depreciation of which has all along operated as a Tax—but a tax unequal and oppressive to extreme. The farmer, who formerly sold forty bushels of wheat to the States for forty dollars, and who now can purchase but one bushel for that money, has certainly contributed towards the support of the war thirty-nine bushels. Now, if every one had received, and still possessed, his due proportion of the money, all would be right—Whether it is all sunk, or all suffered to remain in circulation, would be a matter of perfect indifference to every individual.—No one would find himself one whit the richer or poorer for it. But unfortunately this is far from being the case—the burden has fallen most unequally—whilst some have contributed more than twenty times their just proportion, others have been great gainers, or, at least, have contributed nothing. That restitution should be made to those, who have borne more than their equal proportion, is what justice and equity require of us—and it was solely with a view to effect this purpose, that Congress have pledged the faith of the United States for the sinking all the money within the term of eighteen years. But, should this mode of making restitution prove judicial to the publick welfare, I do not conceive we should be under the least obligation to make good the performance of this promise, provided some other mode could be adopted, that would do equal justice to the sufferers.

But whether Congress, at the conclusion of the war, shall think it necessary to sink so much of the money, as that the remainder shall be equal in value to silver, dollar for dollar—or whether they will suffer the money to find its own level, and discharge the debts due to and from individuals amongst us, at the same value they were contracted at—are questions, in the solution of which, the difficulties at present pressing us, are not involved. The grand desideratum at present is, to be able to raise the necessary supplies, without doing farther injustice to individuals: and let us turn which way we will, let us amuse ourselves with this or that plan, I am persuaded, we shall at length return fully convinced, that it is only to be effected by taxations and loans.

It has been proved that regulation and depreciation are in reality taxes—but of the most unequal and oppressive kind. Surely then, when urged by every motive, which can animate the exertions of a wise and spirited people, we cannot hesitate a moment, with the greatest earnestness, to set about equal taxation. Let the pressure of the burden no longer fall partially on individuals, but let us oblige every man to put his shoulder to the wheel. We have now weathered out five campaigns, whilst the debt we have contracted, is not worth mentioning. For, I again repeat it, nothing but what is due to foreigners can be properly called a debt.—As to what has been borrowed among ourselves, it is not the debt of the publick, but of individuals. Let no man then plead our inability. Has not our supplies of all kinds (except to the amount of the foreign debt) been drawn from amongst ourselves—and if this too could be done by means of a tax the most unequal that could be contrived—how much more easy will it be to effect by one, where the united wisdom of the legislative body of each State will be exerted to render it as equal as possible?

HONESTUS.

Last week the North Carolina Brigade, Col. Clark commandant, passed through this place on their way to Philadelphia.

Monday last passed through this town on his way to Congress, SAMUEL-WITHAM STOCKTON, Esquire, Counsellor at Law, having lately arrived at Boston from Holland. This Gentleman is a native of this State, and we are happy to hear from several quarters that he has uniformly distinguished himself in different parts of Europe as a firm and zealous Friend to the Liberties of his Country, we therefore presume his own State will claim the advantage of his future services.—He left America in the beginning of 1775; and, after the appointment by Congress of a Minister at the Courts of Vienna and Berlin, he was called to the Secretaryship of that Embassy.—We hear also that he has resided the last five months in Holland, where he has much promoted the interest and advancement of the American Cause; and that he brings important dispatches from that country for Congress:—we therefore hope it will be but a short time before our Independence will be recognized by the United States of Holland; which will entitle them to a share of our future extensive commerce.¹

Tomorrow is to be observed, by the Inhabitants of this State, as a Day of publick THANKSGIVING and PRAISE, for the purposes set forth in His Excellency our Governor's Proclamation, inserted in our last.

Notwithstanding the flattering accounts of the British affairs, published in some of the late New-York papers, the wise men of the British Parliament draw a most melancholy picture of the calamitous circumstances of their country—Lord John Cavendish, in a late debate, said, “He would expend his fortune and hazard his life against the natural enemies of his country; and he would do as much to bring Ministry, the cause of all the nation's calamities, to their deserts,” declaring, with all the enthusiasm of resolution, “that his resentment should be found firm and lasting.”—He further observed, that “nothing less than the most exemplary punishment ought to be inflicted upon them, and their respective estates confiscated, and applied towards the expences of the war.”—Sir George Saville, Col. Barre, Mr. Burke, Mr. Baker, with others, were tremendously severe on Administration, the latter declaring that he “would oppose the granting any money, or going into any measures, till the present Administration were dealt with as they ought to be”—Lord North replying with sarcastic wit, and contemptuous pleasantry, Lord George Cavendish, advised him “to be sober, grave and serious that day, and to throw his wit and humour aside, for that they would serve no longer.”

CHATHAM, DECEMBER 14.

The 6th inst. departed this life, at Woodbridge, in the 34th year of his age, Mr. SAMUEL FRANKLIN PARKER, printer,¹ after a long and painful disorder, which he bore with the greatest patience.—His corps was interred the day following, in the Presbyterian burial ground, at that place, with all the honours of war, in the following manner, viz.

1st. A company of Continental troops, with their arms reversed, and a muffled drum beating the dead march.

2d. The corpse.

3d. The Mourners.

4th. Col. Webster's battalion of militia who were on duty in that town.

5th. The inhabitants of the town in general.

After the corps was interred the company of Continental troops under the command of Capt. Neeler, who were also on duty there, fired three vollies over the grave.—It may with justice be said, that the deceased was a zealous friend to American Liberty, and that he lived respected and died lamented by all his friends and acquaintance.—He took an active part early in the present contest. He was a major in the five months service in the troops of this State. Soon after that service was out, he was appointed a muster-master in the Continental army, in which post he continued until his health obliged him to quit the service, and retire home.

AT HIS HOUSE IN CHATHAM,

Best Bohea Tea,

FOR CASH, BUTTER, or any kind of COUNTRY PRODUCE.

Mr. Kollock,

IN reading your late papers, I have been highly pleased with the performances of your correspondent Eumenes. I like his plan, and wish it might be put in execution. It breathes forth strongly the breath of liberty and justice to the oppressed, as well as wholesome counsel and advice to America in general. What can be more reasonable than for Congress to give to every one the true value of his money, instead of giving value for cyphers? By this method the truly helpless widow and orphan, and other innocent sufferers, will be redressed—our public expences lessened and brought within our power—and many evils and difficulties prevented, which would otherwise come upon us. This plan appears to me preferable to taxing in the usual manner, because it would immediately relieve us of an enormous nominal debt, and remove in great measure from us the depreciation of our currency; the bane, as well as the curse of our country; under which it greatly labours, and groaneth at present.

I am aware that many will find fault should this plan take place, and say, our money is our own, and who has a right to take it from us? But remember, my friend, that you have risked your life and fortune, in the defence of your country, and obliged yourself by signing the association agreement, that you will abide by the Congress, and our rulers in general, in compliance with those measures which they in their wisdom shall think proper to adopt. I know that it will be very disagreeable to some monied men to lose fifteen or twenty parts of their money; but let such consider that if they have the true value of the whole, in the remainder, no injustice is done them, and their country much advantaged by such an exchange. The commonwealth ought to be the main object of every member of the community; and every one should be willing to sacrifice some of his private property for the advantage and good of the public; which I trust every true friend to his country will cheerfully do, in order to extricate her from the tyranny of Britain, and from the oppression and cruelty of all those who are taking advantage of the times and of the depreciation of our currency.

A FRIEND TO LIBERTY.

Mr. KOLLOCK,

By giving the following a place in your paper, you will much oblige, your humble servant,

ARATOR.

Mr. Eumenes,

THE plan pointed out by you, in the course of your letters on our paper currency, appears rational and wise in general; yet it appears to me there is an essential error in your plan of emitting new money, to be exchanged for the old. Though you pretend to answer an objection that the new money would depreciate as the old has done; yet I do not imagine you have sufficiently answered the objection; for you say in your fourth letter, "The fifteen million paper dollars proposed would not be a debt upon the country, but might pass for ever with only the expence of striking new bills to exchange the old, when they become ragged." Upon this plan how could the depreciation be hindred?—But, upon a little reflection, I acknowledge it would not depreciate, because it would not at first have any price; therefore, it could not lose a value which it never had.

In order to know whether your plan of emitting money will answer for a community to adopt; let us see how it will answer for individuals to act upon. Suppose you should write an obligation after this manner, "I promise to pay to A—r, fifteen Spanish milled dollars, &c." And underneath you should write, "N. B. I never design to pay "you the money; but I engage to give you a new obligation of the "same tenor with this, as soon as it is worn out, or grown ragged, and "to do thus as often as the old one becomes ragged.

Do you think I would take such an obligation and give you the produce of my farm for it? As well might you imagine I would, as that the inhabitants of these States would take paper money upon your proposed plan of emission, and give the product of their farms for it; when at the same time they were assured that they should never receive any real value for it.

But the plan I would propose is this: Let fifteen million dollars of paper money be emitted, and the old redeemed with it, by giving thirty for one, as you have proposed. But in order to establish and keep the credit of it equal with silver and gold, let a time be fixed by Congress, perhaps three years would be the best, and then let the time be expressed on the face of the bills, when it shall be redeemed with silver or gold, paid to the possessors of the bills at the time expressed on the face of the bills for the redemption of them.

That this purpose may the better be effected; let five million of silver dollars be stipulated for by Congress, to be delivered to them on loan, at least one month before the time fixed upon for the redemption of those bills. Then let ten million dollars be called in by rates, the last of which to be paid into the Continental treasury at least one month before the time expressed on the bills for their redemption; so that all accounts might be well settled, so as to have the money ready to be paid to the possessors of the bills not called in by rate, on the very day it becomes due. Then let Congress assure us that the money shall be thus redeemed, and we will receive it equal with silver and gold.

Married, on Monday evening last, in this city, Colonel ELISHA LAWRENCE, of Jersey, to Miss BECKY REDMAN, (second daughter of the late JOSEPH REDMAN, Esq;) a young lady whose superior beauty, joined with an elegance both of person and manners, render her justly admired by all who have the pleasure of her acquaintance.—The Pennsylvania Gazette, December 15, 1779.

TRENTON, DECEMBER 15.

By recent accounts from New-York, we learn, that the embarkation of troops which took place there many weeks ago, have not yet sailed. Their destination is certainly for Carolina or Georgia—but the reason of their not sailing, is, they have not a sufficient convoy, as they apprehend danger from Count D'Estaing's fleet.

We are informed that the Refugees in New-York are in distressed circumstances, several large families being obliged to crowd in one small room, and other families cannot even produce that convenience, but are obliged to live on board ships in the harbour, and provisions amazingly scarce and dear.

Last week the Hon. Major-General GATES passed through this place on his way to Virginia.

We hear that the Head-Quarters of the American Army is established at Morris-Town, in the Vicinity of which the troops are now hutting.

The Honourable the LEGISLATURE have passed an Act for establishing the holding the Supreme Court in future at Trenton.

Since our last most of the troops of the Virginia line arrived here, under the command of General Woodford, being on their way to the southward.—They are in high spirits, and make a martial appearance.

A New-York paper of the 20th ult. mentions the taking of a packet the 4th ult. with dispatches from General Washington to Count D'Estaing.

Mr. COLLINS.

YOU will greatly oblige a distressed old man by inserting the following Petition in your next Gazette, which I wish to have done for two reasons, viz. That the Council and Assembly, now convened, may see it, and that all my fellow-citizens may have an opportunity, if they please, to give me their aid by joining their petitions with mine.

To the Honourable the Council and General Assembly of the State of New-Jersey, now convened at Mountholly.

The Petition of an Old Man, a citizen of your state, and a firm friend to the Independence of the United States.

Most humbly sheweth,

THAT whereas your petitioner, by industry and care in his younger days, accumulated a small fortune of about four thousand pounds, which, agreeable to law, he placed at interest on real security, the annual income of which was with frugality adequate to the support of himself, his wife and two children: but the depreciation of the Continental Money, which being by a law, passed by your honourable houses, made a legal tender in payment equal to Gold and Silver, has totally ruined your petitioner, his little fortune having been lately paid him in continental bills of credit, the depreciation being as forty to one:

Your petitioner therefore most humbly prays that at this time, whilst your honourable houses are making provision for all the officers of government, nearly equal to the depreciation of the money, you will also make some provision for your petitioner, and save him and his family, together with other aged men, the widow and orphan, in similar circumstances, from want and misery—and your petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

To MARIOT ARBUTHNOT, Esquire, Vice-Admiral of the Blue, and Commander in Chief of his Majesty's Ships and Vessels employed in North America, &c. &c.

The humble ADDRESS of the Committee of his Majesty's Loyal Refugees from several of the revolted Provinces in America.

S I R,

THE Loyal Refugees from the several revolted Provinces of New-Hampshire, Massachusetts-Bay, Connecticut, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, the Three Lower Counties on Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North-Carolina, and South-Carolina, having the Approbation of his Excellency Sir Henry Clinton to assemble, and hold mutual Intercourse with each other, beg Leave to wait upon, and express to you, as his Majesty's Commander in Chief of the Naval Department, those particular, and respectful Compliments, due to a Station so eminent, and a Character so worthy. From the very ready, and warm Disposition which you have been pleased to shew and express in Favour of the Loyal Refugees, we cannot but persuade ourselves that so numerous a Body of his Majesty's faithful Subjects will ever meet with your countenance and protection—After the severe proofs we have already given of an unshaken attachment to our Sovereign, and Country, we trust it is unnecessary to repeat what our actions have so evidently, and uniformly evinced. But permit us, Sir, to assure you that the same Principles of Duty which urged us to the free, and great sacrifices we have made, will also actuate us in future, to afford to you, upon all occasions, as well as to his Excellency the Commander in Chief, every aid, and influence in our Power, for restoring Peace, Order and good Government, to these his Majesty's Colonies.

Signed DAN. COXE,¹ President.

JA. HEPBURN, Secretary.

To the President and Committee of the Loyal Refugees from the several Provinces of New Hampshire, Massachusetts-Bay, Connecticut, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, the Three Lower Counties on Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North-Carolina, and South-Carolina.

GENTLEMEN,

I Am very much flattered by the Address of the Loyal Refugees from the several Provinces of New Hampshire, Massachusetts-Bay, Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, the Three Lower Counties on Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North-Carolina, and South Carolina, and truly happy to find that my zeal and exertions as Commander in Chief of the Navy have merited the approbation so respectable, so honourable a Body of Loyal Inhabitants.

Your sufferings in the Cause of the Constitution of the British Empire, entitle you to every Regard and Attention of the Government and its Officers, and be assured that as one of them, I shall have inexpressible pleasure in contributing, by every means in my Power, to restore to the deluded People of the Colonies, the blessings of peace and freedom.

I am, Gentlemen,

Your most humble

And most obedient Servant,

LETTERS ON OUR PAPER CURRENCY.

LETTER V.

I DID not expect so soon to have wrote again upon the subject of our paper currency, but something has occurred that induces me to offer something more on this head. We are all in duty bound to say and do all that we properly can, for the good of our fellow creatures, and to prevent evil. I cannot help thinking what is best for my fellow countrymen, and what is not; and if I think differently from some others, especially those that lead in public affairs, it may be my unhappiness; but still I have a right to and am bound to point out the wrong measures that are pursuing or which appear to me and many others to be wrong; I say pursuing while they are only in agitation and not determined. When laws are once made I shall submit to them; yea support them, and act as an obedient subject; though I should think that some other measures might have been much better. In my letters I purposely avoided saying any thing upon regulating prices, because I hoped our leaders would have seen the difficulties and bad consequences of such a measure. I also said as little as possible upon the attempt to appreciate our Continental bills, because I hoped a better might be fallen upon. But I find these things are in agitation, and measures pursuing to carry them to the extent. Sure I am the country must and will sooner or later feel the bad effects of such a measure, and I must yet hope they may be avoided.

As to regulating prices, the method I think must be either, First, To set the prices of things were they now are or near it, and let them continue so without alteration. Or, Second, Begin where they now are, or near it, and monthly, quarterly, or yearly appreciate the money; or which is the same thing, lower the prices of goods and provisions. Or, Third. At first order every thing to be bought and sold at the prices they were seven years ago, and so continue. The last mentioned is so unlikely that I shall say no more to it. If the prices should be set as they now are, or near it, and ordered to continue so till our money is struck dead, or all called in by taxes, it would so little answer the purpose of those that are at the bottom of the regulating scheme, and would also fill the country with many difficulties, that I suppose this will not be attempted. Therefore I suppose that the design is to set the prices at first, nearly as things are now bought and sold, and every month, quarter, or twelvemonth, appreciate the money, or which is the same thing, order the prices of things to be lower. But, hic labor, hoc opus. This will not easily be accomplished. It will be difficult to bring people to take a less price than they used to have, especially if taxes are large, and money hard to obtain, which will soon be the case. People will not be easily brought to sell things for a less price than they gave for them. The farmer will not produce more than he wants for his family. The merchant will not trade, and manufacturing will in a great measure cease. The farmer will not, to raise a crop, be at the expence of a thousand dollars, if he thinks he shall not get half so much for it eighteen months hence, as the present price is. It may be said by those on the other side, that though the farmer cannot get above half so much money for his crop, yet he can get as much in any thing else that he wants, and therefore he will produce. But I answer; the farmer that raises more than he needs for family use, wants to lay up some money against the time that it shall be appreciated, or be made as good as silver, and he will rightly think that the thousand dollars that he now has in hand, will be better kept by him than laid out in producing a crop that will not bring half the present price. If he believes that the money will finally be made good, he will keep it by him, and not lay it out in farming; and if he believes that the money will not be made good, but the appreciating scheme finally fail, he will not sell his produce while things are regulated, but keep it till he can have what he thinks a proper price. The same will be the case with the merchants, and in a less degree with manufacturers, and the consequence will be that great part of the country will starve or be reduced to amazing want. Should the regulating scheme take place, and people in general believe that it would produce the effect proposed, it would set every body to hoarding money, and would prevent the circulation of every thing necessary in the country; for money laid by would be better than laid out in farming or any kind of trade. But let us consider some other difficulties attending this regulating scheme. People will in innumerable instances evade the law. 'Tis certain they can do it and no doubt will do it; and it will be done in so many instances, that it will ruin those that endeavours to observe the law, and buy and sell according to it. Again it will be impossible to put a proper price upon things in different places. 'Tis certain the same thing should not bear the same price in every part of the country; and things cannot be brought to an equality by allowing for transportation. A bushel of wheat raised in or near a market town, where land is five times the price, ought to be sold for as much as a bushel of wheat is, after it is brought fifty or one hundred miles out of the country. The same might be said of tanners bark and many other articles, and yet I think there is no law could remedy these difficulties. Again it is next to impossible to regulate the price of foreign goods imported, both to the satisfaction of the country, and the importers, and if the country is not satisfied, they will find some way to distress cities, which must live by country produce. Again, there are no laws made, especially respecting matters that are new and untried, but what soon, and often want altering and amending; and this would be the case respecting the regulating scheme, and would cause such difficulties in such a large extended continent, under such variety of circumstances, as would soon destroy the plan. In fine, there will be so many through the continent that will suspect or be fearful that the scheme will not last long, that they will as much as possible suspend all expensive business till they see what will be the event, and this will help to defeat the design.

I must now say something concerning the appreciation or raising the credit or value of our present currency. The attempt I suppose must be, either by diminishing the quantity, or by gradually diminishing the prices of goods and provisions, by a regulating act, or by both these conjunctly. As to a regulating law I shall say no more. If that is attempted, time will soon shew the wisdom and propriety, or the weakness and impropriety of it. As to diminishing the quantity of our money; if it is not done by exchanging it at a great discount for silver, or new bills struck, I suppose it must be either by calling it in by taxes and burning it; or by borrowing it of those that have it, burning it when thus borrowed, and laying it a debt upon the country; or by both these conjunctly. The diminution of it by taxes must be impossible while the war lasts, because we every year want more for the army, and other public expences, than can or will be paid in by taxes. But suppose the best;—suppose the war over, it will not be easy to call it in by taxation and burn it. There will be still yearly large public expences. There will also be some debts that must speedily be paid. The diminution of the money will be slow; and when money begin to be scarce in proportion to the largeness of the taxes, which will soon be, yea begins already to be the case with great part of the country; men will then enquire what the large taxes are for, and finding they are to make good the money to a few men, i. e. to give them twenty times as much as their money cost them, the country will not bear it. They will appoint such legislatures as will remedy this matter. This leads me to say a word upon the equity of exchanging our old money at fifteen, twenty, or thirty for one; and how unreasonable it is for any to say that this is killing or sinking the money in the hands of those that at that time possessed it. The man that receives a thousand dollars the day, week, or month before he exchanges it, and for these thousand dollars gave something that was worth but the twentieth part of so many silver dollars, does not lose or sink nineteen twentieths of his money by receiving one for twenty. No; nor does he sink a penny of it, but receives the full value. The money has been sinking in the hands of people for several years; and if exchanged for what it is worth at any period, though at twenty for one, it does not any of it die in the hands of the possessour that exchanges it. It has been dying in every man's hands for a long time. For congress or the legislatures to decree that it should be nothing worth, at any period, would be killing in the hands of the possessours: but to exchange it for what it is then worth, is far otherwise. So unreasonable, false, and wicked is the pretences and clamours of those that say it is killing it in the hands of the possessours, and destroying public faith, &c. The Congress justly reject, and that with abhorrence, the thought of violating the public faith. But to give men the proper value, and only the proper value of their money, is not to violate the public faith. But it would be violating the public faith with a witness to give men twenty times as much as their money cost them or was worth, and make the public pay it. My proposal has been that the debts contracted should be paid in money as good as it was at the time they were contracted. I would have justice take place in all cases as far as possible. But to return to the diminution of our money. What taxation will not do must be done by funding, that is, borrowing. Should we borrow the Continental money of the few men through the continent who have it in their hands, and burn it when thus borrowed; this would bring a fine debt upon the country. Should we borrow one hundred and fifty millions dollars, and sink them, this sum, with near one hundred and fifty million, which we now owe, would put us into a fine situation, especially as the proposal is to make all the money as good as silver. But we will suppose the best;—suppose by taxation, or some such way, we had sunk one half this, besides paying our yearly expences; and suppose also that we had exerted ourselves so as to have paid half the debt already contracted; then what we borrowed to diminish our money and the debts before contracted might not exceed one hundred and fifty million dollars. This would and must remain a debt for ever unpaid, for we could not pay the annual interest of it at a low per cent. Suppose five per cent. The interest of our debt of one hundred and fifty million dollars would be near as much. And as the money is supposed to be made good, this at twenty for one would be four times as much as there is Continental money now extant. A fine sum to be paid annually! When then would the principal be paid? Thus we may guess at some of the rare effects of appreciating our money, by regulating prices, and by funding. As to taxes, they should be as large as the country can bear: we need them for many purposes, but sure I am they will never appreciate our money. I have but little expectation that our leading men will come into the best method to manage and settle our finances, till they are forced into it by dire necessity. I know what they must come to in the end, but I fear they will try other measures till the country is much hurt, and can bear those measures no longer.

I have only to add, that the large quantities of counterfeit money, and the increasing practice of counterfeiting; its being so much easier to counterfeit the old money, so long extant, than it would be to counterfeit a new sort that might be struck, and so contriv'd as to be difficult to counterfeit, all shew the expediency of the method I have proposed in my third letter.

EUMENES.

POSTSCRIPT.

I have seen a piece in the New-Jersey Journal signed Unshaken, who seems to be angry with Eumenes, and treats him as his passions and abilities would allow. I have nothing to say to Unshaken, who I am persuaded, will not be unshaken very long. I will only say a few words for the sake of the public; much I need not say since so weak a performance cannot make any considerable impression on persons of sense. Most of his arguments (if any thing he has advanced may be called argument) are such feminine ones, as Deane Swift says, directly tend against the cause they were designed to defend. The only thing he mentions, that I think worth while to say any thing to the public upon, is the supposition that the new money proposed to be struck, would depreciate as the old has done. There are some besides Unshaken that are a little afraid of this; but their fears are groundless; for the ground of the depreciation of the old money was not a fear that America would not prevail against Britain; or that, the Congress and country were not able and willing to make the money good: But the cause was the quantity: Such a quantity as gave opportunity to other causes to operate, and increase the depreciation. Such a quantity especially as gave opportunity to lay by all the hard money. Had there not more than twenty million dollars been struck, comprehending the paper money of the several States then extant, the Continental bills would have remained as good as silver. And should we not strike more than fifteen million dollars new money, and at the same time strike dead all the old, there would infallibly circulate so much hard money, as would keep the paper alive. Should we obtain a small loan of hard money, to emit together with the new struck paper, in order to give it a little more life and vigour, it would not be amiss; any other way than it would increase our public debt, which we should as much as possible guard against. I think I may defy Unshaken, or any body else, to produce an instance where paper money has depreciated, if there was a proper quantity of hard money circulating among it, and where the authority of the whole State was engaged to support the credit of the paper money. As also to shew that paper money ever did or could be made to keep its credit, let what authority would be engaged for it, if there was not a proper proportion of hard money circulating with it. The scarcity of paper money will never keep up its credit without a proper proportion of hard money, and that because foreign nations which any State trades with, cannot be obliged to take it as a legal tender, and because it will often be a damage to traders to be obliged to take it when there is not hard money plenty to exchange for it upon emergencies. I have within forty years past seen all the wisdom of the Eastern States employed, and all the authority of their several legislatures engaged, and engaged in vain, to support the credit of paper money, while hard money was not any part of their circulating medium; and that at a time when they had a good trade, and an open sea coast; and when there was often a great cry of the scarcity of money through the country. I think it has been a mistake in these United States, that they have not found some method to encourage and direct the circulation of hard money with the Continental all the time of the present war, which might easily have been done. This would have saved thousands of private estates, that are now gone. Should the legislature now order, that the paper money should pass at twenty for one with silver, and that all debts and payments should be discharged by the one or the other, in this proportion, it would immediately prevent any further depreciation; and the paper would have no tendency to alter from this, any more than an old three pound Jersey bill had a tendency heretofore to be valued at less than a half joe. Suppose there are now two hundred million dollars extant: They passing at twenty for one, reduces the whole to ten million dollars, which, with the hard money in the country, would be a scant medium of trade. And should there be ten or fifteen million new dollars struck, and the old annihilated, the new would pass in the same reputable, unfailling, unsinking manner that paper money has done, when it had silver for its support. There would be no danger but that people would take, and use the new paper money with all freedom. But the few monied men that have such an eager desire that the old money should be restored to its original value, will keep up the cry that the new money would depreciate, to fright people and prevent the measures taking place. It is evident to all persons that will observe, who the few persons are through the country, that are for having the money made good; and it is obvious what their end and design is. E.

For the NEW-JERSEY GAZETTE.

Mr. HONESTUS,

ALTHOUGH I am no redoubtable champion in any sort, yet, I cannot sit still and see such productions as your last pass through the channel of the Gazette to the publick, without exposing the wretched inconsistencies it contains. You seem to throw the gantelope to all around you, and, Quixote like, are for raising up enemies to combat with, that you may shew your skill in discomfitting them. Your position that regulation is a solecism in politics, is to me a most extraordinary one, and the illustration or proof is wholly unintelligible; unless you mean that A stands for A—s and B for B—k-h---d, and then I can easily conceive that $A = B$; or, supposing A to stand for yourself, that you may very well make $A = 2 B$, or two B1---k h---ds, or even 3 B or three B---k h---ds.

But to leave this Jeu d'Esprit of yours, for I can conceive it to be nothing else, let us proceed to some of your expressions and principles--- You ask whether the same scene of iniquity is to be again repeated, the meaning of which is that you accuse Congress of a scene of iniquity---pray what do you mean by this charge? Do you suppose that the members of Congress, have filled their pockets, or that they have acted as betrayers of their country?-- If you know of any such it is your duty to expose their names-- if you do not, why do you charge them with iniquitous practices?

I believe there never was a subject in any age or country so bespattered and beplaistered with nonsensical observations as this of our paper money--- The plain fact is this--- The Rights of these States are attacked by the ministers and parliament of Great-Britain. The advances were carried on slow at first, and in so desultory a manner that we every now and then entertained hopes of settling the dispute upon terms advantageous to our liberties. But after flattering ourselves sometime in this way, they assailed us in a more open and hostile manner--- we were determined to maintain our Rights inviolate, but had not time to raise funds or procure arms, cloathing or military stores. Our harbours were shut up, our ships taken in every quarter, and, by this means, the prices of all things imported increased, occasioned by the risk and diminution of our trade.--- The only expedient in our power was then to put in practice what we had often before tried with success, namely, to strike paper money—This was done, and it passed as gold and silver—The war went on, the ships of our enemies multiplied on the coast, our trade became more embarrassed, the prices of all imported articles doubled, and as we raised no taxes on ourselves, the constant expenditures necessarily increased the quantity of paper, till it has exceeded six times more than is necessary for a medium of trade—It is true the bills express, that “the bearer is entitled to receive Spanish milled dollars, or an equal sum in gold or silver,” and some men are so ridiculous or absurd as to expect, after having seen and been convinced of the truth of what I have already mentioned, that Congress should perform in the very terms of the bills. What is Congress but the Representatives of the United States of America—In fact, the ability of Congress is nothing more than the ability of America—They have not the secret of the philosopher's stone, to turn base metals into gold—they have no other real wealth but the purses, the affection and confidence of the inhabitants of America.

But the question is, what is now to be done in the present emergency?—Are we to sit with arms across and vent our splenetick complaints, like old women?—Remember the fable of Jupiter and the waggoner, who, having got his waggon into a slough, prayed to Jupiter to draw it out for him—But the God reproved his sloth, and ordered him to clap his shoulder to the wheel.

As no man can doubt the ability of America to be competent to the discharge of the present debt, on supposition of a peace happening soon, there is no reason why the prices of all things should be suffered to increase as they have done, in a ratio so far exceeding the point at which the depreciation ought to be, from the quantity of money emitted—This quantity, as I said before, is about six times more than is necessary for a medium of trade; therefore, the prices at which the produce of this country should sell according to this rule, are as six to one, or six prices—But Congress having a liberal regard to the state of America in general at this time, have recommended twenty prices to be given for “articles of domestick produce, farming “and common labour, the wages of tradesmen and mechanicks, water “and land carriage. Articles imported from foreign parts, to be in “due proportion with labour and the articles as above stated, making “a proper allowance for freight, insurance and other charges—Salt “and military stores, whether of home manufacture or imported from “abroad, to be excepted from limitation of price.”

It is evident from the difference between the present prices now current among us and what they ought to be from the excess of the quantity beyond what is necessary for a medium, I say it is evident how great have been the arts of dishonest and disaffected men --- The taxes this year will be very considerable - - this circumstance and the striking no more bills will, at the end of the next year, without the other aids which Congress are devising, if the present limitations are strictly enforced by several penal laws and carried through in every state, put us on a most enviable footing. Every man will then see the wisdom and policy of the present measure, and feel the benefit arising from it.

Last Tuesday Night a Party of General Wayne's Brigade attacked the Picquet at Powlis Hook, when several Shot were exchanged; but the Rebels finding the Garrison was prepared to receive them, they thought it most prudent to retreat.

A Fleet of about 130 Sail, under a good Convoy, sailed out of Sandy-Hook last Thursday Morning, with a fair Wind, for England, Scotland and Ireland, &c.

The Brig L'Constance, Captain Devereaux from Surinham for this Port, was taken a few leagues from Sandy-Hook the 27th of last Month, by the Rebel Sloop Beaver, and carried into New-London, which made the 33d Prize the Beaver has taken since the War.—The New-York Gazette: and the Weekly Mercury, December 27, 1779. No. 1471.

Mr. COLLINS,

IT is the duty of every honest man in this land of liberty, to endeavour, as much as possible, to confirm his fellow-citizens in the principles of freedom, essential to their happiness, and to promote the common weal and welfare, by every means in his power.

Of all the rights of a freeman, there is none more invaluable than that of the liberty of the press—It is a cardinal and transcendent right not to be profaned by the touch of the hand of power, but ought ever, like the principles of our holy religion, to be held sacred and inviolate—for on this depends our political salvation.

There have been many attempts made in England by ministers and royal minions, upon the freedom of the press, but the spirit of the nation, though in other instances lulled into insecurity, yet in this has ever been too much awake to the danger, to be cheated out of so essential a privilege. Ministers knew too well the uneasy and dangerous consequences of the heats and convulsions such attempts usually bred among the people, to prosecute a matter of this sort to any great lengths. We see in the well-known case of Mr. Wilkes, in what manner the people have triumphed over ministerial attempts—It is true they prosecuted him even to out-lawry—but this outlaw, this banished man has been for more than ten years a representative in parliament, for the capital city of the kingdom.

This instance, together with some others of lesser notoriety, has taught British ministers some useful lessons of wisdom and prudence. The caustick pen and keen satire of Junius, though in the most unequivocal manner applied and directed to the King himself, could not provoke his ministers to vindicate their royal master—They knew too well, that the fire, which animated these writings, was drawn from the very altar of liberty, and that the whole body of the people formed her priesthood.

There has also been a most signal attempt on the liberty of the press, on this side the Atlantick—I mean the trial of John-Peter Zenger, a printer in New-York, in the Year 1735. This man was prosecuted by information for printing a supposed libel on the then governor, (Cosby) and some of the great men, as they were stiled, of that province—But what was the issue of this prosecution?—why, a full and ample discussion of the doctrine of libels (in which all the false principles of star-chamber law, and the arbitrary and illegal opinions and proceedings of venal and corrupt judges were detected and exposed) the honourable acquittal of the printer, and of course the disgrace of the prosecutors and abettors of the suit against him.

To "think what we please, and speak what we think," is a darling prerogative of human nature—I believe no honest informed man in a free country, will deny me the liberty of speaking my sentiments openly, with respect to publick men and measures—If I may speak them, I may write them; and if I may write them, I may surely print them—The hindering me from the last, will certainly and suddenly lead to the preventing me doing the first, and whenever this happens, it is a symptom of the most fatal kind, and the catastrophe of liberty is at hand.

THE Refugees from the county of Middlesex, and Essex, in New-Jersey, are requested to leave their names and occupations at Broughton Reynold's, at Whitehall.

NEW-YORK, Jan. 3.

Last Tuesday night we had a severe gale from the N. E. accompanied with rain, which did considerable damage to the wharves, and some of the shipping; the privateer Britannia, which lay near the Hook, dragged her anchors and drove ashore on the Jersey coast, amongst a large field of ice, which prevented any assistance getting to her until the crew who were quite fatigued with the exertions they used to save the vessel, were made prisoners by the rebels. It is thought, however, that most of her stores will be saved.

Dec. 23. We learn that on the 12th inst. 110 vessels sailed from Sandy-Hook with troops, supposed for the West-Indies.

PHILADELPHIA, December 15.

Jan. 1. By an express from Shrewsbury we learn, that on Sunday last upwards of 100 transports, conveyed by three ships of force, sailed out of Sandy-Hook, and it is said, General Clinton is on board.

Extract of a letter from Morristown, dated Dec. 26.

“The fleet which I mentioned in mine of yesterday, consisting of upwards of 100 sail, which left New York the 23d inst. is the homeward bound trade, under convoy of a 74, and two small ships.—The transports with the troops on board are still at the watering place, 50 or 60 sail; it is conjectured these transports are waiting the last hour for the intelligence by the October packet, which has been expected impatiently some time.

“N. B. My letter of the 25th mentions the troops to be about 6000, and bound to the West-Indies.

TRENTON, JANUARY 5.

Extract of a letter from Baskenridge, Dec. 28, 1779.

“Two fleets of above one hundred sail each have just sailed from New-York, the first, I think, on the 23d, the last on the 26th inst. It is said the Generals Clinton and Cornwallis have both sailed with them. Whilst I am writing "the storm raves without," and I hope will give a good account of some of them. In consequence of this large embarkation, there is good reason to expect the Maryland troops will follow the Virginians to the southward.—There is also an account at Head-Quarters, that the whole British army in the East-Indies, consisting of 3000 Europeans, and two or three times as many natives, were killed and taken prisoners."

His Excellency George Clinton, Esq. Governor of the state of New-York, has issued a proclamation, dated the first ultimo, for convening the Legislature of that state to meet at Albany, on the 4th instant, in order to consider the Resolution of Congress, of the 19th of November last, recommending a limitation of prices.

We have the pleasure to inform our readers from the best authority, that the prices of West-India goods, as well as the real necessaries of life, are falling daily in Philadelphia.

Sunday morning last a fire broke out in Philadelphia, in the late Governor Penn's house in Market-street, which entirely consumed the same. The Legislature at the late sitting at mount-holly, appointed the Hon. Silas Condict, Esq. and Thomas Fenimore Esq. Commissioners on the part of this State, to meet such Commissioners from the other States, as may attend at Philadelphia this day, to "confer and agree on the allowance proper to be made on imported articles, for freight, insurance and other charges, and on such other measures, as may be most likely to render the plan recommended by Congress, effectual through the Union."

To be sold at the house of JACOB BENJAMIN, opposite the printing-office, one pair of brass and-irons and brass fender; likewise a parcel of mens cloathing, one feather bed, one writing desk, one silver watch with a China face, one gold laced, and one plain hat. The highest price given for old pewter.

CAME to the plantation of the subscriber, the 25th of December last, a SORREL COLT, two-years old.

The owner is desired to come, prove his property, pay charges, and take him away, otherwise he will be sold for the same in three weeks from this date.

TRENTON, JANUARY 12,

The British Parliament were to meet, for the dispatch of business, on the 18th of November last. We hear that a large quantity of counterfeit continental money was taken a few days ago, by a party of Major Lee's light dragoons, in Monmouth county. We have not yet learned in whose hands it was found. There was also a considerable quantity of goods, which had been sent out of New-York at the same time, for sale—Several persons were taken, among whom was Anthony Woodward's son.

By a gentleman from Philadelphia we learn that in the late storm, one of the British first-rate men of war, and two other large ships, were cast away to the eastward of Egg-Harbour; that a number of their hands had taken to a boat, and were endeavouring to make their escape, but were pursued, taken, and brought back again.

On Tuesday night the 28th ult. the late dwelling-house of William Pidgeon, Esq. in the township of Stafford and county of Monmouth, took fire, and was unfortunately burned down; although the fire was pretty soon discovered by Capt. Isaac Andrews, who lived in the house, yet the wind being very high, the flames spread with such amazing rapidity, that five persons lost their lives, viz. Captain Andrew's two daughters, one about eight and the other six years of age, two servant men and one hired man.

Every thing in the house was burned, except two beds; those who escaped, six in number, not being able to save their common apparel. Mr. Pidgeon who had been in a low state of health some-time before this melancholy accident happened, very narrowly escaped by leaping out at a window in the upper story, tho' not without being considerably burned by first attempting to come down the stair-way: and receiving cold, while removing to a neighbouring house, in his shirt, he was taken ill of the pleurisy, and died on the morning of the 5th inst.—His remains were interred on Saturday last, in St. Michael's church yard, at this place.¹

On Sunday last, in the 77th year of his age, departed this life, after a short illness, Mr. THOMAS JANNEY, of Nottingham township, in Burlington county.—His remains were yesterday interred in the Friends burying ground at Lambertton.

BALTIMORE, December 28.

By the House of Delegates, December 29, 1779.

Resolved,

That William Paca, John Henry and Joseph Gilpin, Esqrs. or any two of them, be, and they are hereby appointed commissioners, to meet commissioners appointed by the legislatures, of the several states of New-Hampshire, Massachusetts-Bay, Rhode-Island and Providence plantations, Connecticut, New-York, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware and Virginia, at the city of Philadelphia, for the purpose of considering the expediency and practicability of limiting the prices of merchandize, produce and labour, and of agreeing to the same, should they judge it necessary, in such manner as may be best adapted to the situation and circumstances of this state: And that the commissioners appointed by this state, make a return of their proceedings to the next general assembly for confirmation, if deemed proper.

By order,

J. DUCKETT, C. H. D.

PHILADELPHIA, January 12.

For several days past we have had accounts of vessels being drove ashore, along the sea-coast in the late severe gales, but cannot find that any of them are to be depended on, except that a brig of 12 guns, belonging to the enemy, is ashore near South-Amboy, and a ship of 20 guns at Squan.

TRENTON, JANUARY 19.

We are informed that on Thursday se'nnight, Capt. Rudolph of Major Lee's rangers, a sergeant, corporal and eight men, landed on Sandy-Hook, within half a mile of the light-house—surrounded a house, and made seven of the enemy prisoners: they also brought off 45,000 counterfeit continental dollars, a quantity of hard money, and several parcels of dry goods of different kinds, without any loss.

We hear that on Friday evening last a detachment from the American army; commanded by Major-General Lord Stirling, went in sleds from Morristown with several pieces of light artillery, in order to surprize the British troops upon Staten-Island, and to bring off the stores which might fall into their hands. They went upon the island on Saturday morning; but the enemy, it is said, having had information of the design, retired, with most of the principal inhabitants, to the forts on the east side of the Island, carrying with them a considerable part of their valuable effects. Our troops, after scouring the Island, came off on Sunday, bringing with them several prisoners, horses, a number of tents, and other valuable effects.

This may serve to shew the British mercenaries, with what zeal and alacrity the Americans will embrace an opportunity, even in a very inclement season, to promote the interests of their country, by harrassing the enemies to their freedom and independence. With pleasure we inform our readers that our army, which, through the unexpected inclemency of the season, winter setting in much earlier than usual, and the roads becoming almost impassable, had suffered a few days for want of provisions, are, from the spirited exertions now making, likely to be well supplied.

New-York, January 19.

On Friday night, the 14th instant, a large detachment from the Rebel army, consisting it is supposed, of between 3 and 4000 men, with six pieces of cannon, and two howitzers moved suddenly from the neighbourhood of Morris-Town, and being (as it is reported) transported in Sleighs over the ice, reached Staten Island before day break in the morning of the 15th, bending their march towards Decker's Ferry. Colonel Buskirk, commanding the 4th battalion of Brigadier-General Skinner's Brigade posted there, having received intelligence of their approach, judged it proper to retire towards Ryerson's Ferry, not being in force sufficient to oppose so considerable a corps. The Rebels pursued their march, and before noon, took post upon the heights, near the redoubts, constructed at the north end of the island; from their position, cutting off the communication betwixt the corps hutted there, and the troops at Richmond and the Flag Staff; they remained in this situation till early in the morning of the 16th, when they were observed retiring from Staten-Island, without attempting any thing; they burnt Decker's house and a very few small vessels frozen in by the ice at that place. A small detachment which harrassed their rear, made a few prisoners; and several deserters came to the different posts during their stay in the island.

They committed many excesses, in plundering and distressing the inhabitants.

PHILADELPHIA, January 22.

Extract of a letter from General Washington to His Excellency the President of Congress, dated Morristown, January 18, 1780.

“SIR,

“The severity of the weather having rendered a descent upon Staten-Island practicable by the ice; and it being also imagined, that the communication between New-York and the Island was interrupted by the same cause, a favourable opportunity of striking the enemy stationed there, (who amounted by report to 1000 or 1200 men) seemed to present itself. A detachment of 2500 men, including the troops under General Irvine, was accordingly made for that purpose, and the command given to Major General Lord Stirling. It was originally intended to have attempted the execution of the matter by surprize; but there being good reason to suppose that the enemy by their emissaries or by other means had got notice of our designs, little hope remained of effecting the business in that manner. As the detachment was assembled near Elizabeth Town, it was thought advisable to proceed at all events, upon a consideration that no bad consequences could possibly result, and that we might find an opportunity of reaping some advantages. We were however disappointed in our expectations, as Congress will perceive by the enclosed report from Lord Stirling."

Lord STIRLING'S Report.

SIR,

I have the honour to inform your Excellency, that early on yesterday morning the corps under my command crossed the Sound at De Hart's Point, and proceeded towards the watering place. The enemy having received previous intelligence of our movements, a surprize was out of the question, and as their works were well situated, and appeared otherwise strong, an assault was deemed unadviseable, as it would probably have cost us more than we could have gained by success. We found too, contrary to our expectation, that the communication between the Island and New-York was open. Immediately on our arrival in front of the enemy's works, they sent off a boat to the city, and in the evening several vessels came down from thence to the Island. As from this circumstance there was no hope of reducing them for want of provision or fuel, and a reinforcement might have rendered our continuance dangerous, we determined to march off this morning. The retreat was effected in good order, and with very little loss. A party of the enemy's horse charged our rear guard under Major Edwards, but was immediately repulsed. The Major had three men killed, killed one of the light-horsemen and took his horse. Some few of the men were frost bitten, and though we took all the pains in our power to have all those unable to march transported in sleighs, yet I imagine a very few may have been left behind. Immediately after crossing, a party was detached under Lieut. Col. Willet, to Decker's house. The corps there had been alarmed and barely made its escape. The house, as a garrison place, and 8 or 9 small vessels were burned. A considerable quantity of blankets and other stores were found. While the troops were upon the Island, a number of persons from this side took advantage of the occasion to pass upon the Island, and plundered the people there in the most shameful and merciless manner.—Many of them were stopped on their return, and their booty taken from them. In addition to which, I have sent an order for publication, requiring those who had eluded the search to restore the articles in their possession, and exhorting the good people at large, to assist in detecting them. All the soldiery on recrossing the ice, were searched, and the little plunder they had, taken from them and their names noted, that they may be brought to punishment. The articles recovered are, and will be deposited with the Rev. Mr. Caldwell, who is exerting himself in the affair, to be returned to the owners. I am happy to inform your Excellency, that a very inconsiderable part indeed of the troops dishonoured themselves, by participating in these enormities. The officers and men, in general, shewed a good disposition, and I only regret there was no opportunity of turning it to advantage.

I have the honour to be, &c.,

(Signed) STIRLING.

TRENTON, JANUARY 26.

Extract of a letter from Baskenridge, Jan. 22, 1780.

“We had a fast lately in camp, by general constraint of the whole army; in which we fasted more sincerely and truly, for three days, than ever we did from all the resolutions of Congress put together. This was occasioned by the severity of the weather and drifting of the snow, whereby the roads were rendered impassable, and all supplies of provision cut off; until the officers were obliged to release the soldiers from command, and permit them to go, in great numbers together, into the country, to get provision where they could find it. The inhabitants of this part of the country discovered a noble spirit in feeding the soldiers; and to the honour of the soldiery, they received what they got with thankfulness, and did little or no damage.

“As soon as the roads were broken, and the brave fellows got their bellies full, they went, with amazing alacrity, on the Staten-Island expedition; but the British getting intelligence, our people, after reconnoitering their strength, returned not a little disappointed. They did little more than to burn a large fortified house, and five small vessels, after stripping them of everything valuable.”

ALL persons indebted to the Monmouth Commissioners for Real and Personal Estates sold, are desired to make immediate payment, or they will be prosecuted without any distinction.

POUGHKEEPSIE, January 31.

Last week arrived at Morris-Town, from St. Croix, (via N. Y.) Richard Cruger, Esquire, a gentleman of eminence, and a zealous Advocate for the Rights and Independence of America.

By a gentleman from New-Jersey, we are informed, that near 40 of the enemy's vessels have been driven on shore, on different parts of the coast, from Egg-Harbour, as far southward as the Eastern shore of Maryland and Virginia.

EXTRACTS, from the JOURNALS of CONGRESS,
December 11.

Congress took into consideration the report of the Committee for procuring supplies for the army, and thereupon Resolved,

That eight thousand barrels of flour be requested from the State of New-Jersey, part of which to be furnished as soon as possible, to answer the immediate demands of the army:

PHILADELPHIA, January 26.

On the morning of the 15th inst. Major Lee detached, from Burlington, forty men under the command of Capt. Patten, in sleighs, who before next morning were along side the guard ship, laying froze in the ice near Sandy-Hook; but finding that the ice for several yards around her was cut, so that they could not board her, they retired to a small distance unperceived, where they surprized two schooners and a sloop, made the men prisoners, burnt the vessels, and then returned without the least loss, bringing with them the prisoners, and what plunder they thought proper.

TRENTON, FEBRUARY 2.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman at Elizabethtown, dated January 29.

“The enemy paid us a visit here last Tuesday evening; they were in town between ten and eleven o’clock, under the command of Lieut. Col. Boskirk of the New Levies: The plan was well concerted, and as well executed; they evaded our guards, and were in town before any one knew it.—They have taken forty or fifty privates and several officers, with ten or twelve of the inhabitants, Major Williamson and Capt. Gifford fell into their hands. Mr. Belcher Smith, in attempting to escape was likewise taken. They burnt the Presbyterian church and the court-house, plundered Jeramiah Smith, but no other houses of any consequence, as they were afraid to enter them, and stayed but a little time before they pushed off. The same night they made an excursion to Newark, surprized the guard there, took Mr. Justice Hedden out of his bed, and would not suffer him to dress; they also took Mr. Robert Niel, burnt the academy and went off with percipitation. These were chiefly regulars.”

The curious may be amused by the following table of the weather for the last month, and we should be pleased to have it in our power to compare it with tables of observations made at some distance; it is hoped some correspondent of our brother Printers in the neighbouring states will afford us this pleasure.

Erratum: In the Regulating Act, inserted in the first page of this Gazette, No. 107, second column, line 23d, for twenty-five read seventy-five. We were led into this mistake by an erroneous copy.

Elizabeth-Town, January 16, 1780.

BY an order of the fourteenth instant, all officers, soldiers, militia men, and followers of the army, were positively prohibited from plundering or insulting the inhabitants of Staten-Island; notwithstanding which many of the inhabitants of this state took advantage of the opportunity, while the army kept the enemy within their works, and acted in open violation thereof; Major-General Lord Stirling therefore positively requires, that all persons possessed of any articles of plunder, taken on the island, do immediately deliver the same to Doctor Caldwell, at Springfield, to the end that they may be returned to the proper owners, otherwise they will be proceeded against with military severity:—The very few of the soldiery who were guilty of the same misconduct have been already compelled to restore what they had taken, and will be most severely punished. All the good people of this state who know any persons within the above description, are desired to give immediate information thereof.

The Major General thanks the officers and men for the good disposition shewn in this excursion; particularly for the good order so conspicuous on retiring from the island; he is only sorry circumstances did not permit him to avail himself more effectually of their services.

By order of Major-General Lord Stirling
WILLIAM BARBER. A.D. Camp.

WHEREAS the honourable the Congress of these United States have lately recommended to the legislatures of the several states to adopt measures for furnishing the supplies of the army upon a different plan from what has been heretofore pursued; and whereas some of the states have already made such regulations as must put the department on a new establishment, it seems therefore indispensably requisite that the accounts on the present arrangement be brought to a speedy and decisive close. And whereas some further alteration of systems will probably take place, it will be expedient not only that the accounts be soon adjusted, but that a uniform mode for effecting this be observed, throughout the various districts: I have therefore thought fit to publish this advertisement directing that every deputy or other officer serving in the quartermaster-general's department whose appointment is immediately derived from me or my assistants, to call upon all persons employed by them respectively, to make out exact returns by the first day of March next, of the sums of money due in their several districts up to that time.

And lest this measure should be frustrated for want of seasonable supplies of money, I do hereby notify all those who have any demands on any branch of the department, to lay their accounts before the proper persons, with suitable vouchers, for a complete settlement to the time above directed. In those cases where the demands cannot be paid directly in cash, printed certificates will be given, specifying the sums due to each individual; for which end blank certificates will be struck and distributed among the several agents, who are required to register them in books to be kept for that purpose; copies of which must be immediately sent to camp to be lodged in my office, that I may be enabled to ascertain a just state of the debts due from the department.

NATH. GREENE, Q. M. G.

Morristown, January 25th, 1780.

N. B. The Printers in the several states are requested to insert the above in their respective papers.

TO be sold, a plantation containing about 174 acres, 40 acres of which is woodland, and 20 good meadow ground, a good dwelling house, spacious barn, a well of pure water and an excellent orchard; situated within one mile of Somerset courthouse, in Middle-bush, New-Jersey—It was formerly the property of Jacobus Stricker. For terms apply to M. Ryan, on the premises.

January 18th, 1780.

WHEREAS David Cowell has advertised in the New-Jersey Gazette, “a Negro man to be sold or exchanged for a suitable Negro boy.”—As he has no legal right to any such Negro man, nor pretensions to claim any but myself, that I know of, duty to the publick (without any desire to expose his conduct) requires me to inform them, that I have a solemn engagement for my freedom for the consideration therein mentioned, written and executed by his own hand, which he has often attempted, and still persists in endeavouring to violate, although I have very sufficient proof that the said consideration is fully paid him: Therefore this is to caution and warn all persons from buying, exchanging, bargaining, or any way being concerned in an assignment for me, as I have fulfilled my part of the aforesaid agreement, and expect that freedom, justice and protection which I am entitled to by the laws of the state, altho’ I am a Negro.

ROWE.

NOTHING but a hearty desire for the speedy recovery of my wounded country, in whose service I have long suffered, could induce me to stand forth in this way. I am conscious my abilities are insufficient for doing justice to the subject I am undertaking; but as no other person better qualified has offered their service, I can no longer sit an idle spectator, and see my countrymen led astray by a set of petty politicians, who are constantly imposing upon the public some erroneous and villainous scheme for the appreciation of our currency, which they would persuade us is so far lost, as to admit of no remedy but that which their emperical pens are prescribing; which schemes are the only ones which could be desired for its downfall. The productions of the True Patriot, in the Jersey Gazette, and those of your correspondent Eumenes,

I should suppose were wrote at the instigation of the British emissaries, had I no evidence of their proceeding from reverend heads, whose mouths are daily employed in petitioning the Almighty in fervent prayer for the establishment and welfare of these United States. Their plans of taxation are unprecedented, and evidently calculated to ruin us. Let not then the name of an athenian patriot delude us, or the evidence of arithmetical calculation persuade us, that political knowledge is annexed thereto. They may, for ought I know, be well enough acquainted with church government; but sure I am, they have very little knowledge of the government of states, and the principles of national policy. Their schemes are directly contrary to the plan pursuing by our wise rulers, who only have any real right to direct. The honourable and august legislature of America, upon whose wisdom and fidelity we have, and may, with propriety, risque our all, have adopted a judicious, rational, and, as near as possible, equitable plan, for the defraying our necessary expences, which, at the same time, supports our national credit. What then is left for us to do but press forward with a chearful compliance in the road which is pointed out by them? We are not wont when our illustrious general orders us to march upon any expedition, to stand and cavil with him, and say, such and such a procedure would be attended with less difficulty, and prove more advantageous to the service. This would immediately spread anarchy through the army; and cavilling at législative bodies, is not often attended with much better consequences. The only effectual way to surmount great difficulties, is to unite our efforts, and press forward with a determined resolution of overcoming. A patient labouring under any chronic disorder, does not usually reprobate the prescriptions of his physician, though he may not at first receive any sensible advantage. All drastick medicines are attended with bodily maladies for a time, though they frequently prove the most salutary in the end; as such we may reckon the present taxation to the body politic.

Did Eumenes ever read the confederation of these United States? Did he ever read the solemn, rational, and important address of Congress to their constituents? Surely, if ever he did, he has forgot their import, or he never would assume the impudence of proposing schemes so diametrically opposite, and endeavour to lead the ignorant and unwearied into a belief of his heterogeneous doctrine. Did he ever read the consequences thereof to France, in the reign of Lewis XIV, with respect to his paper currency, which has not to this day recovered its former credit? I would advise him to think a little more attentively upon these matters, before he imposes any more of his logic upon the public.

The True Patriot, after depreciating the predominancy of vice, and evil practices, like a good christian, proceeds to assert the most palpable falsehoods, fraught with every evil, viz. That our currency was exchanged for silver and gold, and other articles of commerce, at a discount of twenty for one, when the discount [at this] very time [was] only ten for one. A falsehood too notorious to [admit] of an [answer]. How far his productions tended to lessen the value of our currency, and increase the discount, can [on]ly be estimated by the influence his writings had upon the minds of the public.

Eumenes, so far as he has followed any plan, has proceeded in the same erroneous manner, and imposed upon the public under the specious pretence of doing justice to individuals. I confess there is so[me] injustice in having twenty dollars made good in the hands of the person who received them only for one dollar; yet, if we extend our ideas as far as that period, we shall find, that he will pay nearly as much of his money out of his hands in order to redeem it in the present mode of taxation, as in any other way; and more indeed, if [h]e [h]as is generally the way with speculators and disaffected persons [realized] his money. These persons then at whom they rail so bitterly, and are desirous of swearing so largely, are almost the only persons who will be benefitted by [their plan.] [They have made a terrible [mistake?

] our money has depreciated more rapidly than usual since the commencement of the present war. I shall therefore make it my business, in some future paper, to shew it is partly real, and partly ideal, and therefore by no means desperate, but what will be easily relieved by a strict adherence to the prescriptions of our political physicians, and proceed to make some observations on credit in general, and the nature and delicacy of public credit in particular. In the mean time, I hope, my readers will unanimously subscribe my name¹

STANDEFAST.

TO THE TRIBE OF SWEARERS.

AS you are an object of pity, to every generous spirit, it is the dictate of humanity to labour for your reformation. To effect this you must be convinced that profane swearing is absolutely inconsistent with honour, or politeness. Honour is derived from a conduct directed by reason, and an imitation of the most sublime examples. He who honours Almighty God, is a man of honour, because such a conduct is the dictate of the highest reason, and conformable to the example of the sublimest geniuses. Politeness, comprehends modest, easy, and gentle manners—is studious not to offend the virtuous; and without these, no man has any just pretensions to the character of a gentleman. Let the rude swearer, who pours out his filthy language in all companies, reflect how distant his character is from that of a man of honour, and a gentleman. There are not two things in nature more opposite. A haggard-fury may as well claim the charms of a fine lady, as a noisy swearer make pretensions to honour or politeness. It will be said, that some persons have used profane language, who were eminent for their shining accomplishments. A man may possess something that is amiable, although his character is in general infamous; and a character may in general be respectable, that is defiled by some vice, if the vice is not habitual; but however seldom the crime is committed, it is a deep stain, and a blot of infamy. No talents can secure the swearers from disgrace; the enlightened and virtuous will view them with mingled pity and contempt. And even the profane themselves, will view them in the same light, in their moments of reflection. As "It is not in folly not to despise a fool." It may be asked, "If this vice be attended with no advantage, and has infamy and ruin in its train, how can we account for its prevailing? Pride, is the cause men love distinction; and to be singular, even in vices, gratifies the low pride of some grovelling minds. And a wish to appear heroic and fearless, leads many into crimes which otherwise they never would commit. In defiance of all the sober sense of mankind, to blaspheme the name of God, appears to them a mark of a daring mind, which is superior to vulgar fears. These two motives, equally vile and contemptible, are the first inducements to this low language. Another motive is, to prevent chasms in their conversation; for barren souls that want ideas, often endeavour to stun us with oaths, that we may not observe their vacant minds. These several causes, at first produce swearers, and then they are multiplied by imitation. The vices of great men (as they are called) have a mighty influence. When by dint of wealth, friends, or other accidental cause, a man is made great by holding a post of honour, if he is vicious, he is a public curse, by propagating vice; and by his example, will make more swearers than a thousand preachers can reform. The herd of s[]cophants, and all the inglorious throng, who never lift a thought to Heaven, or stretch beyond the narrow scale of human life, will catch the tone, and copy the dirty language of the vilest wretch that ever rode in the car of wealth or power. Thus are vices propagated, until innocence and virtue become blushing strangers in the land, and every numerous circle is defiled with infamous characters.

The great question is, What will stop this raging pestilence? To reason against it is vain, for the guilty mind is dead to reason, before this vice can find admittance, otherwise men would not incur temporal and eternal infamy—for nothing!—I therefore write for the sake of the living, to prevent them from joining this congregation of the dead.

AN AMERICAN.

—The New-Jersey Journal, Vol. I., Numb. LI., Wednesday, February 2, 1780.

CHATHAM, FEBRUARY 2.

A party of the enemy consisting of about 300 infantry, under the command of Col. Van Buskirk, of the new levies, and about 60 dragoons, said to be under the command of Capt. Steward, of the 17th light dragoons, with several refugees, the whole, in number, near 400, crossed on the ice from Staten-Island to Trembley's Point, about three miles from Elizabeth-Town, last Tuesday night. From thence they were conducted by Cornelius Hetfield, Job Hetfield, and Smith Hetfield, their principal guides, the nearest and most retired route to Elizabeth-Town. They entered the town, in two divisions, before the alarm was sounded. As soon as the troops that were in town, (consisting of about sixty men) perceived their danger, they retreated; however they took a major, who was commandant of the place, and two or three captains, that lodged in town that night, and a few troops. They then set fire to the presbyterian meeting and court house, which were consumed; plundered, insulted, and took off some of the inhabitants, and retreated, with great precipitation, by the way of De Hart's Point, whose house they likewise consumed.

The same night another party of the enemy, consisting of draughts from the different regiments stationed in New-York, passed over the North River, in sleighs, to Powles-Hook, from thence through Bergen, the nearest way to Newark. They entered the town in three divisions, and immediately proceeded to the academy, where they surprised and took about fifteen men, being all the troops that were on duty in town. A lieutenant, notwithstanding he was twice a prisoner with the enemy, by his vigilance, effected his escape. They then set fire to the academy, which they consumed; during which time a party was detached to several of the inhabitants houses, which they rifled of the most valuable effects; that which was not portable they destroyed. They took off Justice Hedden, and Robert Neil, jun. two of the inhabitants. The former gentleman was taken out of his bed, and without any other cloaths on except his shirt and a pair of stockings, carried off, notwithstanding the strongest solicitations of Mrs. Hedden, to the officers, for permission for her husband to dress himself, who received two wounds with a bayonet, one in the face, the other in her breast, by those mighty veterans of fallen Majesty.

They continued in town about fifteen or eighteen minutes. A few militia being hastily collected, pursued their rear, by which means five of the enemy fell into their hands. Two of them died a short time after with the intense cold.

We are informed, that Justice Hedden is so frost-bit, that it is thought he will lose both his legs.

Last Sunday evening, about 8 o'clock, a party of the enemy landed at Rahway and carried off near a dozen of the inhabitants.

The church in town not intimidated nor discouraged by the barbarous impiety of the enemy, met last Sabbath, when Mr. Caldwell preached to them from 1. PET. i. 7 and GAL. vi. 9 and sung the following verses:

With flames they threaten to destroy
 The children in their nest,
 "Come, let us burn at once they cry,
 The temple and the priest."
 And shall the sons of earth and dust
 That sacred pow'r blaspheme?
 Will not thy hand that form'd them first,
 Avenge thine injur'd name?
 Think on the cov'nant thou has made,
 And all thy words of love;
 Nor let the birds of prey invade,
 And vex thy mourning dove.
 Our foes would triumph in our blood,
 And make our hope their jest;
 Plead thy own cause, almighty God,
 And give thy children rest.

NEW-YORK, February 2.

Last Sunday evening a party consisting of 13 mounted Refugees went from Staten-Island, and in the vicinity of Elizabeth-town, surprised Mr. Wynantz, a Lieutenant of the rebel militia, and 8 private men of Col. Jacques's regiment; few Republicans on this Continent are more remarkable for their implacable opposition to his Majesty's government than some of these prisoners; they were all the same evening securely lodged on Staten-Island. They were found at a fandango, or merry-meeting, with a party of lasses, who became planet-struck at this sudden separation from their Damons. The further trophies of this successful excursion are three handsome sleighs, with ten good horses, all of which were yesterday driven to New-York over the ice from Staten-Island, an enterprize never yet attempted since the first settlement of this country.

CHATHAM, Feb. 2.

NEW-YORK, Feb. 7.

Our last Accounts from Jersey are, That General Washington was at his Head Quarters at Morris-Town, that there was no more than a Captain's Guard at Elizabeth-Town, and no other Guard at Newark than the Inhabitants.

By Accounts from Philadelphia as late as last Tuesday, we learn, that the Grand Meeting which was to have been held there some Time ago, by Delegates from the Different Provinces to regulate Prices is coming to nothing, several of the Colonies never having sent any Representatives.

On Sunday evening the 30th ult. a Party of 13 mounted Rufugees, went to Raway, a Place about 4 Miles from Elizabeth-Town, in New-Jersey, where they surprised Lieutenant Wynants of the Rebel Militia, and 8 Privates of Col. Jacques's Regiment that had been on a Party of Pleasure with some young Ladies: They dismissed the Ladies, but brought away 4 Men, 4 Sleights, and 9 Horses, without the least Hurt to themselves. The Sleights were brought to this City the next Day, with the Horses on the Ice.

TRENTON, FEBRUARY 9.

Was married at Princeton, on Friday evening last, JOEL FITHIAN, Esquire, a Representative in Assembly for the county of Cumberland, to Mrs. ELIZABETH FITHIAN, widow of the Rev. Mr. Philip V. Fithian, late Chaplain to Col. Newcomb's regiment in the five months service.

The weather has been so extremely cold for near two months past that sleighs and other carriages now pass this place to Philadelphia on Delaware, a circumstance not remembered by the oldest among us.

We learn that on Sunday night, the 30th ult. a party of the enemy made an excursion from Staten-Island to Elizabeth-Town, from whence they carried off a few of the inhabitants prisoners.

About the same time several of the inhabitants in the vicinity of Newark having gone in sleighs to some flats in the sound, in order to gather oysters, and not keeping a proper lookout, were also made prisoners by the enemy and carried to New-York.

We hear that on Wednesday last three brigades of our army were detached from Morris-Town to Newark and Elizabeth, in order to cover those parts of the country from the depredations of the enemy.

TO be sold by publick vendue, on Thursday the 17th instant, (Feb.) at ten o'clock in the forenoon, at the house of Mr. Covenhoven, near Pleasant Valley, Middletown, county of Monmouth, a Brigantine or Polacre, together with her tackle, apparel, furniture and cargo.

—New-Jersey Gazette, Vol. III, No. 111, Feb. 9, 1780.

To WILLIAM ALEXANDER, Esq; Major General in the Rebel Army.

WHILST you wished to conceal your follies in private life, wasting your time in a state of stupid insensibility, the community at large, however they might despise your character esteemed you an object beneath their contempt.

Your assumed titles forfeited by your ancestors for acts of treason against their country, made you the more ridiculous, as they made you the more distinguished, and in truth, considering the part you act, would fit you but indifferently were you even entitled to bear them.

What could induce you, vain, unthinking man, to attempt an active part in your public capacity; was it to expose yourself still more glaringly to public ridicule; what could lead you, openly to describe the NOTHINGs which you performed, was it to convince us that you are unacquainted with your present profession; what could tempt you to thank your corps for their behaviour whilst on Staten-Island; was it to inform your friends with your safe return to Elizabeth Town; your plunder might have spared you the trouble.

We read of Generals, equal to the duties of the field; who fail in the cabinet of others; qualified only for the latter: you, are every way unfortunate; totally unfit for both.

The art of war is ever in a state of improvement; with respect to diction and invention, particularly so in this country. Arnold thought to take the capital of Canada by making approaches of show; but it was reserved for our modern Alexander to attack work, strengthened by Abbatis of that element, ten feet high: [vide Rebel Paper, Jan. 18] he however was more prudent; or the General reconnoitered after dinner.

Your retreat however, you particularly plume yourself upon; it is indeed the test of a great Commander, and considering the numbers, connected position of the King's troops, and the great distance you had to retire, your situation was alarming; we are yet to learn that long straggling columns are the best adapted for a movement of this nature; not to mention that your rear guard was fairly run in upon by seven or eight dragoons, who took several prisoners under your very nose; but even here you carried off trophies of victory; one of those brave horsemen fell; his horse was added to your booty; you marked the circumstance and your friends have recorded it, with all the warmth of enthusiasm: but here let the matter rest. I am not personally your enemy; nor do I wish to deprive you of the honours, now preparing for you, in the capital of America. On a future occasion I dare say you will think it your business to make yourself acquainted with the state of works which you lay a plan to attack; as you may otherwise be thought censurable in being ignorant of their defences; but unpardonable, if strengthened by such unheard of Abbatis, as your friends discovered on Staten-Island.

METELLUS.

CHATHAM, February 2.

A party of the enemy consisting of about 300 infantry under the command of Col. Van Buskirk, of the new levies, and about 60 dragoons, said to be under the command of Capt. Steward, of the 17th Light-Dragoons, with several refugees, the whole a number, near 400, crossed on the ice from Staten Island to Trembly's Point, about three miles from Elizabeth-Town, last Tuesday night. From thence they were conducted by Cornelius Hetfield, Job Hetfield, and Smith Hetfield, their principal guides, the nearest and most retired rout into Elizabeth Town. They entered the Town in Two divisions, before the alarm was sounded. As soon as the troops that were in the town, (consisting of about sixty men) perceived their danger, they retreated; however, they took a Major, who was commandant of the place and two or three captains that lodged in the town that night, and a few troops. They then set fire to the Presbyterian meeting and Court House, which were consumed; plundered, insulted, and took off some of the inhabitants, and retreated, with great precipitation, by the way of De Hart's Point, whose house they likewise burned.

The same night another party of the enemy, consisting of draughts from the different regiments stationed in New York, passed over the North-River in sleighs, to Powles Hook, from thence through Bergen, the nearest way to Newark. They entered the town in three divisions, and proceeded to the academy, where they surprised and took about fifteen men, being all the troops that were on duty in the town. A Lieutenant, notwithstanding he was twice a prisoner with the enemy, by his vigilance, effected his escape. They then set fire to the academy, which they consumed; during which time, a party was detached to several of the inhabitants houses, which they rifled of the most valuable effects, that which was not portable they destroyed. They took off Justice Hedden, and Robert Neil, Jun. two of the inhabitants. The former gentleman was taken out of his bed, and without any other cloaths on except his shirt and a pair of stockings, carried off, notwithstanding the strongest solicitations of Mrs. Hedden, to the officers, for permission for her husband to dress himself, who received two wounds with a bayonet, one in the face, and the other in her breast.

They continued in town about fifteen or eighteen minutes. A few militia being hastily collected, pursued their rear, by which means five of the enemy fell into their hands. Two of them died a short time after, with the intense cold.

We are informed that Justice Hedden is so frost-bit that it is thought he will lose both his legs.

These accounts are true, errors excepted; but these errors are so many and of such magnitude, they can hardly have been owing to inattention, nor to any want of skill in computation.¹

Last Sunday evening, about 8 o'clock, a party of the enemy landed at Rahway, and carried off near a dozen of the inhabitants.

—The Pennsylvania Gazette, February 9, 1780.

On Tuesday night the 25th inst. the rebel post at Elizabeth-Town and Newark, were compleately surprized and carried off, by different detachments of the King's troops.

Lieut. Col. Buskirk's detachment, consisting of about 120 men, from the 1st and 4th battalions of Brig. Gen. Skinner's brigade, with 12 dragoons, under the command of Lieut. Stuart, moved from Staten Island early in the night, and got into Elizabeth-town without being discovered, between the hours of ten and eleven, meeting with little resistance, they made prisoners, two Majors, three Captains and forty-seven privates, amongst whom were five dragoons with their horses, arms and accoutrements. Few of the rebels were killed, but several were wounded by the dragoons, although they afterwards escaped.

Major Lumm of the 44th regiment, marched from Powles-Hook about 8 at night, having under his command the flank companies of that regiment, with detachments from the 42d Anspach and Hessian corps, in garrison in this city, and passing the rebel patroles upon the banks of the Passaic, reached the town of Newark unperceived by the enemy about a quarter of an hour later than Col. Buskirk's arrival in Elizabeth-town. Small parties were instantly posted to masque the principal avenues of the town, and Major Lumm seized possession of the academy, which the rebels had converted into a barrack; a momentary defence being attempted, 7 or 8 of the enemy were killed; the remainder consisting of thirty-four non-commissioned officers and private men were taken prisoners, as were likewise a rebel magistrate, remarkable for his persecuting spirit and another inhabitant.

The Capt. who commanded in Newark made his escape; the Lieut. is said to be killed. These services were performed without loss. The following are the names of some of the rebel officers, &c. brought to town on Thursday last from Newark Mr. Joseph Hedden, a magistrate, and commissioner for the sale of the Loyalists estates in Jersey; Mr. Robert Neil an acting Commissary.

From Elizabeth-town,—Major Eccles, of the 5th Maryland regiment, Capt Belt, of the 4th regiment, from Prince George County, Mr. B. Smith, son of Mr. Peartree Smith, Major Williamson and his brother.

Feb. 2. Last Sunday evening a party consisting of 13 mounted Refugees went from Staten Island and in the vicinity of Elizabeth-town, surprized Mr. Wynantz, a Lieut. of the rebel militia, and 8 private men of Col. Jacques's regiment; few Republicans on this Continent are more remarkable for their implacable opposition to his Majesty's government than some of these prisoners; they were all the same evening securely lodged on Staten Island. The further trophies of this successful excursion are three handsome sleighs, with ten good horses, all of which were yesterday driven to New-York, over the ice from Staten Island, an enterprize never yet attempted since the first settlement of this country.

TRENTON, FEBRUARY 16.

The Honourable the GENERAL ASSEMBLY of this State meet here this day, agreeable to adjournment.

We are informed that on Saturday last the barn of Nathaniel Ayres Esq. at Baskenridge, took fire by means of a person shooting pigeons among the straw in the barnyard, and was entirely consumed, with all the grain and hay therein.

A letter received at Baltimore from Philadelphia intimates, that the men of war and troops, which lately left New-York, are destined for Jamaica, where it is said, they are to be joined by the squadrons of Admirals Hyde Parker and Sir Peter Parker, with a number of land forces from St. Kitts, St. Lucia, &c. and from thence are to proceed on an expedition against the island of Cuba, of which Havanna is the capital city.

On Thursday night last the enemy, under the command of Generals Stirling and Skinner, visited Elizabethtown entirely upon a plundering party.—Among other houses, they plundered Doctor Barnet's, Messrs. William P. Smith, William Herriman, Matthias Halsted and Doctor Wynantz; the two former in a most barberous manner. The house of Mr. Smith they searched throughout for Mr. Elisha Boudinot, who' they thought was concealed there; but fortunately both he and Mr. Smith lodged out of town.—After terrifying the women and children, they heroically marched off with their plunder and five or six prisoners. Thus is the British army reduced to mere marauding parties,—our army or fortresses they durst not attack; but if a town is left with women and children in it, their valour is certainly displayed there.

Trenton, Feb. 14, 1780.

The humble PETITION of WANT and MISERY Addressed to all Christian Readers.

WHILE thro' the drear of frost and snow
Shivering and shaking now we go,
O cast a tender eye!
For this good end your wealth was giv'n:
You are the delegates of Heav'n
To stop the heart-felt sigh!

While cloth'd in fur you stand elate,
You cannot feel the wretched state,
You cannot form our woe;
Yet must each sympathetic breast
When once it hears how we're distress'd
And how forlorn we go.

When cold and hunger both prevail,
And both with equal force assail,
To wound a mortal frame,
Bring to each mind a horrid view,
A scene as horrid as 'tis true,
And almost wants a name.

The parent hears his offspring cry,
The children watch the parent's eye,
And catch the falling tear;
Then echo back each dismal groan,
Till soon one universal moan
Of sorrow rends the air.

Tho' worthless objects may be found,
Who justly feel the piercing wound,
Yet be the fault their own;
Leave them to Heav'n, while you dispense Those blessings you've receiv'd from thence,
And gain'd the immortal crown.

How many pray'rs you'll then obtain,
How many blessings not in vain,
Or undeserv'd bestow'd:
From morn to night, from day to day,
Poor WANT and MISERY will pray,
To bless the great and good.

New-York, February 16.

Mr. RIVINGTON.

SEEING in your last Wednesday's Gazette, an extract taken from a rebel paper of the 2d instant, giving an account of taking and bringing Justice Hedden and Robert Neil prisoners from Newark to this city, treating Mr. Hedden with great cruelty and reflecting on the officer who commanded that party, you may inform the public that the apprehending of Justice Hedden was no part of the object of the King's officers, but that one Walker a volunteer with them, who with many others had been most inhumanly and barbarously treated by Justice Hedden, went with a few of the privates to his house and took him, without waiting long for him to put on his cloaths, which he intentionally delayed, when the officers perceived on their march his want of more cloathing they supplied him with some.

If Mrs. Hedden was wounded, it is what she merited, by her assaulting and opposing all in her power, the carrying away her husband, there was no intent to hurt Mrs. Hedden, but to make her desist in her violence, if any harm happened to her she must blame her own fury. Mr. Hedden and his friends, may, if they have any sense of justice remaining, find that justice hath in part overtaken him, when they reflect on the acts of barbarity, he has frequently committed on many of his Majesty's loyal subjects for not perjuring themselves in abjuring their lawful sovereign and swearing allegiance to the Congress, and to the state of New-Jersey; among many of his persecutions, were imprisonments, keeping some several days without meat, drink, or any fire in the severity of the winter, reducing others to bread and water only, stripping many women and children of their cloathing, beds, and household furniture, and then banishing them without the necessaries of life, and seizing and selling the estates of a great number of his Majesty's subjects to his no small emolument.

Robert Neil is also notorious in his way, a bankrupt four years past, since acting under the pretence of a Sub Deputy Quarter Master to the Rebel army, made it his constant practice to take and dispose of, on his own account, to the continental troops, the wheat, corn, and other grain and also the firewood he cut from many valuable lots of land, belonging to those he pleased to call Tories, and enemies to the state of New-Jersey, whereby both Hedden and Neil have amassed large estates with the properties of others, common justice it is hoped will prevent their discharge, till they have made full satisfaction to his Majesty's faithful subjects for the injuries they have done them.

CHATHAM, (New-Jersey) February 9.

The Magistrates of the county of Essex, abhorring the savage and detestable practice of plundering, resolved unanimously, at a meeting held the 23d ult. at Newark to exert their influence and authority to detect and convict all the inhabitants of the county of Essex, who were guilty of so much baseness, in the late incursion upon Staten-Island, contrary to the previous general orders of Major-General Lord Stirling, and contrary to every feeling of humanity, and to assist in collecting and sending back every thing they possibly can which was stolen from the inhabitants of Staten Island, agreeable to the general order of Lord Stirling, issued upon his return, and published in this paper.

Last Saturday night a few of the inhabitants of Rahway made an excursion to Staten-Island, and brought off a militia Captain and seven loyal inhabitants.

TRENTON, January 26.

Extract of a letter from Baskenridge, Jan. 22, 1780.

“We have had a fast lately in camp, by general constraint of the whole army; in which we fasted more sincerely and truly for three days than ever we did from all the resolutions of Congress put together.

This was occasioned by the severity of the weather and drifting of the snow, whereby the roads were rendered impassable, and all supplies of provision cut off; until the officers were obliged to release the soldiers from command, and permit them to go in great numbers together into the country, to get provision where they could find it. The inhabitants of this part of the country discovered a noble spirit in feeding the soldiers, and to the honour of the soldiery, they received what they got with thankfulness, and did little or no damage.

telligence, our people, after reconnoitering their strength, returned, not a little disappointed. They did little more than to burn a large fortified house, and five small vessels, after stripping them of every thing valuable."

Mr. COLLINS,

Please give the following Petition a place in the New-Jersey Gazette, that the Legislature, as well as the people at large, may have the most early opportunity of being acquainted with the very great distress the late law, making the Continental Bills of Credit a legal tender in payment of debts, in its deplorable depreciated condition, has brought on the innocent orphans, as well as others in this and all the states in union.

To the Honourable the COUNCIL and GENERAL ASSEMBLY of the State of New-Jersey.

The Petition of a Guardian most humbly sheweth,

THAT whereas your Petitioner, upwards of five years past, was appointed Trustee and Guardian of four orphan children, by the last will and testament of his deceased friend; that your Petitioner, agreeable to the trust reposed in him, received from the executors of his deceased friend the said children's legacy, amounting to near six thousand pounds, which your Petitioner placed at interest on land security. Two of the borrowers proved disaffected, and have gone to the enemy, whose estates have been confiscated, and sold; your Petitioner therefore has now no remedy but to receive continental money at about forty for one, so that your Petitioner will get between thirty and forty pounds for fifteen hundred lent; not only so, but all those who borrowed the remaining four thousand five hundred have offered to make payment, which your Petitioner has by solicitation delayed receiving. Relying, therefore, on the justice and candour of the Honourable Legislature, that they will by law make some provision to prevent the total ruin of the innocent and helpless.

Your Petitioner humbly prays, that the Legislature will take this matter into their serious consideration, and grant such relief as in their wisdom they may judge most beneficial on this trying occasion.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray
A GUARDIAN.

Middlesex, Feb. 4, 1780.

Mr. COLLINS,

I SEND herewith some of the correspondence between Lord George Germain and General Howe which is extracted from the Parliamentary Register; your publishing of it may afford some amusement to your readers.—The flattery they paid to each other, while they had expectations of conquering, is perhaps the grossest that ever was written. The alteration in Sir William's stile after his loss of the Hessians at Trenton, is worthy of observation; he immediately demands of the Ministry a reinforcement of 15,000 men; and on his hearing of the fate of Burgoyne, at Saratoga, desires leave to resign. I am your's, &c.

A. B.

Copy of a letter from Gen. Howe to Lord George Germain, dated Halifax 8th June, 1776.

My Lord,

ON the 6th instant, the Mercury packet arrived with your Lordship's dispatches of the 27th April, duplicate 28th March, copy of your Lordship's letter of 25th April, to Lieutenant General de Heister, and several papers relative to the state of the Hessian troops; copies of letters from your Lordship to the lords commissioners, of the admiralty, of 26th April, and to Sir William Erskine, of the 1st same month; also copy of a letter from Colonel Faucitt to the Earl of Suffolk, on 9th April.

These dispatches were delivered to me by Captain Emmerick, accompanied by a letter from your Lordship, setting forth his good services in the late war; I apprehend he might be employed here to great advantage, should this contest continue for another year, by returning to Europe, and bringing a corps of 500 German chasseurs, but in the present campaign, without proper troops for him to act with, or a knowledge of the country, he can be but casually employed, yet I hope to good effect.

The utmost attention shall be given to the experience and great abilities of Sir William Erskine in the military line, and I shall with pleasure make known to him your Lordship's commands to me in his favour.

The contents of Colonel Faucitt's letter has given me much satisfaction, and I shall not fail to make a proper use of the knowledge it contains.

While writing this I have advice that some transports with Highlanders are arrived at the entrance of the harbour, and I am not without hopes, that we shall all join under sail tomorrow. I cannot take my leave of your Lordship without expressing my utter amazement, at the decisive and masterly strokes for carrying such extensive plans into immediate execution, as have been effected since your Lordship has assumed the conducting of this war, which is already most happily experienced by those who have the honour of serving here under your auspices. That you may finally receive the acknowledgements of a gratified country, the lasting glory which such services merit; and that I may in some degree contribute to the completion of measures so vigorously concerted, is the fervent wish of your Lordship's, &c.

Wil. Howe.

TRENTON, MARCH 1.

Jonathan Bowen, jun. Esq. is elected a Representative in General Assembly for the county of Cumberland, in the room of James Ewing, Esq. lately appointed Auditor of Accounts. At the last sitting of the Legislature at Mountholly, Abraham Clark, Esq. was appointed a Representative in Congress for this state, in the room of Dr. Thomas Henderson, who declined taking his seat.—N. J. Gazette, Vol. III, No. 114, March 1, 1780.

WERE it probable that Dr. DAVID COWELL intended to submit the validity of his engagement for my freedom, or the decision of the performance of my part thereof, to the impartial tribunal of the publick, I would cheerfully lay the facts before them, having no doubt but the undeniable proof in my possession will carry inevitable conviction before any tribunal in heaven or on earth; but as he still pretends to be desirous of a legal determination, it is not necessary to give the publick that trouble at present: However, since he has mentioned two Gentlemen, I sincerely believe, without "any desire to expose their conduct," because that would be the only means of rendering their characters more amiable; yet, as they will not descend to take notice of his notable performance, I might be justified in exposing his conduct by open design, when perhaps attempting to violate his solemn engagement with me would appear the least exceptionable part of his character. But I will forbear, only observing, that if a person should become notorious for having defrauded his father, robbed his brothers and sisters of their patrimony, and by venality and debauchery, render his person as nauseous as his character is contemptible, an exposition would avail no more than the repeated curses of an injured country on that Doctor by whose negligence and misconduct numbers of brave soldiers have been sent to eternity, at a time when their services here were most necessary. Wishing that every foot may wear the shoe that fits it, while I continue to pray for the prosperity of that government which protects the rights of a poor Negro.

JOSHUA ANDERSON.

Freehold, Feb. 25, 1780

 THE Publisher of the New-Jersey Gazette, in his paper No. 83, of the 28th of July last, gave notice that the price of the Gazette, as then fixed, would be raised or lowered at the commencement of each quarter, according to the general tenor of the prices for the necessaries of life. He has, however, waved the privilege of increasing the price of his paper, and continued it for now more than two quarters since that date without alteration of terms, except in a very few instances, voluntarily made by some of the subscribers, from a conviction that those then stipulated were inadequate to the expense of paper and printing. He has also for some time past flattered himself that the proposition he is now constrained to make, would be rendered unnecessary by the introduction of a limitation of prices, by which all pecuniary transactions must have been placed upon an ascertained and stable footing. He did not suffer himself to doubt that this measure would have taken effect, when recommended by the most respectable authority, highly approved by the people of this state, and so early and unanimously adopted by the Legislature. Why the same laudable and disinterested motives have not influenced the counsels of other states, he leaves to those who are more dexterous at solving political mysteries. It is a matter of no difficulty to calculate what the price of the Gazette ought to be, compared with the prices current for the necessaries of life, and it will occur to a single thought that stating it at Thirteen Dollars by the quarter will leave it below the mark of profit, and convince the publick that gain cannot be the only view of continuing it; and the Publisher will be happy in an opportunity of proportionably diminishing the price upon an appreciation of the currency. This sum he expects for the current quarter, advanced in the same manner as proposed in his advertisement above-mentioned. From those who are near to the Office he still expects the same kindness of being paid in Produce at the former rates, agreeably to the terms published the 30th of June last, which is a great convenience to him, and he trusts not inconvenient to the customers. He desires that all arrears may be paid up without loss of time to avoid confusion in accounts, and that the Packet-Masters will be so good as to attend to this object,—observing to collect an adequate sum for depreciation, the which is submitted to themselves.

Two days after the departure of the Granville Packet, Capt. Kempthorn from Sandy Hook, he was attacked by three rebel privateers; a Sloop of 14 guns, a brig of 12, and a schooner of 10, all which after a brisk action of about an hour he forced to sheer of.—The sloop being the most powerful vessel engaged him nearest, and from appearance must have suffered very considerably, as she was obliged to bear away, and made signals of distress to her consorts, which bore away after her, and hove too a good way to leeward to give her the assistance she must have needed.—When she bore away both pumps were at work; in the course of the action, the sloop was so near the Granville, that she frequently ordered her to strike in language peculiar to American privateers, of which no other notice was taken than by plying them more hotly with their guns.—The Granville received no material damage, except in the wounds of two of the people; one of whom was Mr. Steele the first mate, who lost his eye by a piece of an iron bolt weighing 13 ounces, which buried itself in the socket of his eye, and the upper part of his cheek bone, turning his eye quite over his nose; the piece was extracted and the eye replaced by the surgeon Mr. Walpole, who by reducing it, performed a very capital cure, and Mr. Steele is now in a fair way of recovery.—The piece of iron was so uncommonly large, to lodge in so mortal a place without occasioning death, that it was thought a curious present for the British Museum, where it now is with the history of the case.

N. B. The Granville only carried 12 four pounders, and 45 men.

“Nothing can equal the Tyranny we are under. The Property of the People is at the Mercy of Commissaries and other Agents for Congress. They give us Certificates instead of Money for our Goods. Though we are now under the most oppressive Taxes, not a Farthing can be got on the Certificates. Congress will not enable their Agents to take them up. I have hitherto laboured in vain for a Law to oblige the Tax-gatherers to receive the Certificates in Payment, on the old and fair Maxim, that Discount is good Pay. If I don't succeed what follows, but that we are under the Government that will not, or cannot pay its Debts, and yet are daily exacting new Spoils from the wretched Slaves they have made us? We must proceed to further Sales of our Property to satisfy the Collectors of Taxes, or be subject to ruinous Distresses.—Oh! the Folly of trusting to the delusive Promises, and Assurances, that the Expences of the War should be defrayed by the Sales of the Crown Lands! We have saved at the Spicket, but our Tyrants draw from us the Bung. We have strong Debates on this and other Subjects; you shall know the Issue of them in a few Days. If Congress will not pay their Debts, a Commission of Bankruptcy must go out against them. The Hour is at Hand—you see their Certificates are no better than Blank Notes—worse than their Paper Dollars.”

Mr. RIVINGTON,

I send you a List of their High Mightinesses in the Congress for the current year, and wish to see it frequently re-published in your Paper.

CAN it be disagreeable to such as desire at the close of our calamities to be distinguished from the rest of their countrymen? But be this as it may, it certainly is a tribute every Loyalist owes to the honour of the British nation, to shew, as the truth is, that only a few of the unnatural confederates with the French and Spaniards were reputable citizens of Great Britain or America. Here indeed it is known to every body, but it may not be abroad, that in all the provinces, the better sort, and indeed a vast majority of the people, despise the trusts and shun the elections of the usurpers; only the violent and interested attend them; and as is the fountain, so are the streams.

I have annexed to the names of some of the members a note of their occupations; and hope you'll make enquiries for the true and proper additions to the rest. The intelligent Refugees of the several Colonies can give you the necessary information. I wish it to be done with candor. Some of the present Delegates had the rank of gentlemen in the happy days of America; and they will be fortunate, if when restored to us, they are able to shew that they have resisted the malignant councils which have wasted the blood and treasures of their countrymen.

It would doubtless be very grateful to the Public to have a succinct history of the origin and fortunes of the illustrious Statesmen now in the Congress, who, tho' not elected by a tenth part of the American commonalty, have the hardiness to pledge themselves, by the powers they assume, to prosecute the arduous designs which their predecessors have sagaciously abandoned for reasons not yet perhaps proper to be explained.

To be SOLD by private Sale,

On or before the first day of April next, The Farm called the Mount Airy, pleasantly situated on the banks of the Delaware, on the Jersey side, just above Burlington island, consisting of about two hundred and fifty acres, forty of which are woods, back from the river; there are about thirty acres of meadow, reaching from the woods through the center of the farm to the river, where the tide is stopped out by flood-gates at only the expence of keeping up about sixteen rod of bank: the extensive water front will make it considerably more valuable some future day, and well adapted for a gentleman's country seat, having fishing and fowling in season. The House is a decent frame, forty-six feet front, with a spacious piazza ten feet broad, situated on an eminence commanding an agreeable prospect both up and down the river; two rooms and a kitchen on the ground floor, with stone cellars paved with brick; two good bed-chambers and garrets ceiled; a good orchard on each side the house, with an interval left for a spacious garden.—The land along the front of the river is laid down with red clover. There are two other houses on the premises, one ranging with the above near the water, a tolerable house, suitable for a family, having a small orchard, &c. The other at the entrance of the woods, built for the conveniency of an overseer, a new log-house, with a barn, &c. a fine spring running near the door, which yields a constant stream through the whole plantation. For further particulars enquire of the proprietor, living on the premises.

“From Mr. Ludlow, who has left New-York and thrown himself upon the mercy of that state, besides other persons from the same place, we learn, that the situation of the Refugees is more doleful than ever. No supplies have arrived from Europe since the fore part of the fall of any kind, nor any intelligence of the troops since their departure, except what has been conveyed them thro’ our hands. The high toned loyalists sing small, and hang their drooping guilty heads.”

I WOULD recommend to the three quaking authors of the two illiberal pieces of calumny signed ADAM, hereafter, (in their preaching for their father the devil) to deliver the plain dictates of reason in the natural language of truth, and no longer act the hypocrite to me and their too indulgent country, as it will never admit a doubt what "government is prayed for by the whole triumvirate, while the men are so well known by their friends, and their characters and cause blacker than the slave they want to keep in their debt, and consequently in their service his life time.

Seeing therefore those miscreants, who having lost all sense of truth and decency, have “rendered their persons fit companions only to runaway negroes, and their congenial spirits” amiable only to demons, it will be thought justifiable by open design (“for that Doctor who has in his possession from the head of the department, authentic credentials of having “acted in the military hospitals near two years as an industrious, humane and skillful Senior Physician and Surgeon, and always manifested great zeal to the American cause) to “send to eternity, those whom it would disgrace any country to receive, if they give any molestation when it shall be judged best to call forceably, for the unfaithful disobedient negro, which shall be as soon as any gentleman offers able and willing to receive him, and give a just restitution to his master.

New-York, March 11.

Mr. RIVINGTON,
SIR,

Seeing in your paper of the 29th of January 1780, an account of that well known titular Justice Joseph Hedden, of Newark, being safely lodged (en Provost). By giving the following authentic narrative a place in the Royal Gazette, it will not only tend to hold up this man in his proper colours, but very much oblige a number of the Loyal Refugees.

ON the 13th of March 1777, I was seized early in the morning, by a Rebel serjeant named POST, and twelve others, all armed, and brought to the town of Newark, (fifteen miles from my own house) through mud and dirt the whole way almost knee deep, (my persecutors being allowed to ride) I was arraigned before Hedden, Burnet, and the Rebel Major Hays. After many speeches being made by Hedden and Hays, and three witnesses sworn against me, Hedden said if I would make an ample confession, it would be better for me; I told him, I had none to make; he again repeated the same words, with this addition, that if I did not, he would find proof to hang me at the next court, being the second Tuesday in April following: I again told him I had no confession to make: he then wrote a mittimus, and committed me to the main guard, where I was treated with the greatest indignity till the 18th at night, when I made my escape and got to Staten-Island, and during the time he had me in confinement, being from the 13th to the 18th inclusive, there was no refreshment allowed me but water, and very little of that.

I am, Sir, with very great respect, your most humble servant,

A Jersey Refugee.

CHATHAM, (New-Jersey) Feb. 23.

A small party of the enemy, consisting of about 50, made an incursion to Newark last Saturday night. They entered the town about 12 o'clock, plundered some cattle, and took two of the inhabitants prisoners; but the alarm guns being fired, the inhabitants were so alert in assembling, that they obliged those freebooters to abandon their cattle and make a very precipitate retreat.

On Sunday night last Mr. Nicholas Dean, an ensign in one of the Scotch regiments at New-York, deserted and came over to our people at Newark; from whom we have obtained a list of regiments, with their strength, stationed on Long Island, Staten-Island, and in New-York.

On Thursday the third of February, 1780, was married at Mount Holly, Colonel THOMAS MAYBERRY, to Miss POLLY SPONG, of Maryland, a young lady, the beauties of whose mind shone with such superior brightness, that the charms of her person lost some share of their influence by the more attractive powers of "innate goodness;" unaffected wisdom and sanctity of manners.

During the short space allotted for her stay, with her deeply afflicted partner her virtues brightened with each brightening Sun and like the Sun (in her domestic sphere) shed their sweet influence on all around her, and promised in prospect, a lengthened pleasing scene of conjugal felicity.

As she lived beloved for her virtues, as a faithful wife, a dutious daughter, a sincere friend, and a valuable companion, so she died more beloved and revered for her calmness and resignation at the awful close

Finis coronathopus.

The solemn scene is shut, on Saturday the 26th, she exchanged this life for a better, in the seventeenth year of her age, and on Tuesday evening the 29th, her remains were deposited in a vault, dug for that purpose, in Mount-holly Churchyard.

Consign'd to dust, the tenant of a tomb,
 Snatch'd from the bridal bed and splendid room,
 Maria lies——but ah how changed she lies
 Late the fond hope of all a husband's joys,
 So young and yet so good——but soft my soul,
 Would impotence Omnipotence controul?
 Murmers be hush'd shall man of Heav'n complain?
 Our mortal loss is her immortal gain.—

Whereas my wife, Nancy Davis, having absconded from my bed and board, and otherwise misbehaved, I do hereby forbid all persons trusting her on my account, as I am determined on not paying any debts of her contracting from the date hereof.

TO THE PUBLIC.

Nassau-Hall, Princeton, New-Jersey, Feb. 24, 1780.

AS the college and grammar-school in this place are now beginning to recover from the desolation they have suffered in consequence of the war; as the scholars are collected from the most distant parts of the continent, and even the West-India islands; and as the Trustees and Faculty are now exerting themselves with great diligence for the improvement of the seminary; there are some things which I think it of much importance on my part to communicate to schoolmasters and parents. This would not have been done in a newspaper if it had been possible to find any other way as easy, speedy and effectual.

Schoolmasters are entreated to be as careful as possible to make the boys intended for college, accurate in their preparatory studies. If they come here ill-founded in classic learning, and obtain admission it will be impossible for us fully to remedy that defect by going back to the first principles: and there are many cases in which to reject them for the fault of their teachers, and not their own, would seem very hard, besides other circumstances that often plead strongly in their behalf. There is the greater necessity of attending to this, that the Trustees of the college have seen it proper to allow of admission into the junior class when they enter on the study of the sciences; and though they are kept reading a part of their time in the higher classics, it is plainly impracticable to enter so minutely into the principles of grammar and syntax as would be necessary for those who have these matters yet to learn. I will therefore take the liberty of recommending a few particulars.

1. Let effectual pains be taken, and early, to teach them readily to apply the rules of syntax; for which purpose there are many excellent books published. Rudiman's Grammatical Exercises for beginners, and Mair's Introduction for those farther advanced, are among the best; but any of them will do well enough in the hands of a skillful master. It ought to be remembered that it is of much more consequence to make them understand the grammar and structure of the language well, than to make them by force of memory or application, translate passages of the classics either in poetry or prose. Experience tells us, that if they intermit their studies but a month or two they will soon forget what they have learned, unless the foundation is well laid, as above.

2. In prosecution of the same plan, it were to be wished that masters, instead of pushing boys forward to the higher classics, or making them change their books often, would not only make them perfect in the construction, but give them a very extensive vocabulary of the language by the use of easy books and such as they have ideas sufficiently comprehensive to understand. By these I mean Corderius, Erasmus, Æsop's Fables, Selectæ e Veteri Testamento Historiæ, all of which were written or collected by great men, in order to facilitate the instruction of youth. To this should be added translating always back from English to Latin as well as from Latin to English, and writing versions of both kinds. For want of this, nothing is more common than to meet with boys who say they have read Virgil or Horace who yet cannot speak three sentences in Latin upon the most common subjects, and cannot explain two pages of Corderius or Erasmus unless they have read them lately; nay, will very simply answer, if they be desired to do it, that they have not read them of a long time. This is just as absurd as if in arithmetic they should say they could do the rule of three, but had forgot numeration and addition, not having applied to them for some time past. I am persuaded that were boys taught the whole construction of the Latin language from such books as Corderius or Erasmus's Colloquies, and could they express everything readily in classic Latin that might be expressed by the words to be found in these books, they would be better Latin scholars than many who have finished their college course. Let a scholar so qualified open any book whatever, he would understand almost everything he saw, and of the little he did not understand he would know very well in what manner by a dictionary he might be speedily informed.

3. It is earnestly recommended to masters to teach the boys to read and pronounce properly, paying attention to the quantity of the syllables. They should from the beginning be made to lose their place in the class as certainly for a false quantity as for a wrong word. If this is neglected at first, and they are suffered to contract a vicious habit of pronouncing, it will be in vain to think of correcting it afterwards by teaching them the rules of prosody.

4. Masters of grammar schools are requested by frequent occasional or rather periodical exercises in reading, spelling, speaking and writing, to make the scholars accurate in their knowledge of their mother tongue. Certainly this is of the first importance, and will be thought so by all parents whose approbation is worth seeking for. You will say this ought to be done in English schools; undoubtedly it ought; But what knowledge they acquire there ought to be preserved and increased in every stage of their progress. There is an advantage in a grammar-school and college for this purpose, for when they are learning the principles of grammar in general in order to obtain a knowledge of the dead languages, it will not hinder but promote and facilitate their improvement to point out to them the idioms of different languages, and particularly wherein their own agrees with, or differs from that which they are endeavouring to acquire.

I conclude with taking notice that the art of teaching any science whatever to advantage, is built upon two great principles. 1. That the learner should be made as perfect as possible in one thing before he be carried forward to another. 2. That the steps of transition should be as inconsiderable, or in other words, as easy and gentle as possible. The first of these I suppose will not be disputed by anybody, and is as easy in its application, as it is just in its nature. There are masters, however, who carry boys through the grammar with any thing less than half learned, so that in their lessons they are stammering and guessing, saying one word right and two wrong, by which the master's time is wasted, and yet the profit of the scholar very small. The second principle is as visibly just as the other, but of much greater compass, variety and difficulty in the application. It may be illustrated by the way now frequently taken in teaching the art of writing. Some masters have analysed the whole into a certain number of simple strokes, each of them easily observed and imitated by itself; and after they have learned these perfectly one by one, they join the whole together with the utmost facility as well as accuracy. Something of this kind should be constantly in the view of the master of a grammar-school; and he is the most accomplished teacher who can make the steps by which the pupil proceeds the most easy, natural and obvious.

I shall now offer a few advices to parents who send their children to a grammar school or college.

1. That they would not attempt to force their children on faster than is for their real advantage. It seems to be a very general object of desire or ambition with parents to have their children taught in as little time as possible in the grammar-school, and entered as high as possible in the classes in college. Nothing can be more preposterous than this; for certainly it is more honourable as well as pleasant for a boy to be at the head of one class, than at the bottom of the one immediately superior to it. Besides it makes their work difficult, and their improvement or success uncertain. If parents are desirous that their children's education should be soon finished, that they may not arrive at the stature of men before they have completed the work of boys, it is a most laudable purpose. But the true way to obtain it is to begin early, that they may have time to be taught in a proper and effectual manner. If this opportunity is already unhappily lost, I would recommend altering the object of the instruction, and instead of giving them a regular course, making them perfect in some of the most essential branches and omitting others.

2. It is of much consequence that children be regular and constant in attendance. If they are called home on trifling occasions, or suffered to go home on frivolous pretences, the hurt that it does them is much greater than is commonly apprehended. It gives them an idle turn, and takes their heads off from their books: It breaks the thread of their instruction, and throws them behind their class, which extinguishes their emulation, and often produces a despondent indifference and sloth. They generally tell you when requesting this licence that they will study hard to make up the time of their absence; but experience tells me that the very reverse is commonly the case. Nay, though they were in some degree to perform their promise it would be of little avail; for if parents expect that masters will take the trouble of extra attendance in such cases, and add to the fatigue perhaps already too great, I believe they will be generally mistaken.

In the last place, parents are requested to support, countenance, and co-operate with the moral government of the seminary. It will be wholly in vain to expect boys to profit in their studies if they are allowed to be loose in their morals. I look upon it as certain that the past prosperity and success of the college of New-Jersey has been capitally owing to the strict attention paid to this circumstance by the Trustees from its first foundation. Now it is easy to see how injurious it must be to boys, if the system of government and example at home is different from, perhaps directly opposed to, that of the seminary where they receive their instruction. We say they shall not be suffered to play at cards or dice, to swear and speak profanely, or take their diversion abroad on the Lord's day, and withal endeavour to persuade them that these courses are the road to perdition. But when they return home to their parents, all these things are done frequently, openly, and without reserve. Perhaps I shall hereby expose myself to the reproaches of that honourable class of men the Free-thinkers of the age. This gives me very little concern, and does not shake my opinion in the least degree. There are, however, some even of them who readily admit that children and youth should be kept from such practices in a seat of learning, though they make no scruple of defending the same indulgences in persons of riper years. The consistency of this I leave them to make out at their leisure, and shall only say, that at any rate those parents who approve of the system of education practised, should, for their own sakes, be very cautious of counteracting or defeating it either by discourse or example.

CHARLESTOWN, February 4.

The fleet which we have had frequent intelligence of collecting at Sandy-Hook, sailed from thence on the 24th of December last. It is said to have consisted of more than 140 sail, about 50 of which were empty victuallers and merchantmen bound to Europe. By what we can learn, the Russel and Robuste, of 74 guns, the Europa, Defiance, and Reasonable, of 64, the Renown of 50, the Roebuck and Romulus, of 44, and two frigates, sailed with the fleet. Of the transports three, viz. the brig Lady Crosby, and the sloops Swift and Henry, have been brought in here. Off Cape Hatteras, about four weeks since, they met with a severe storm, which separated the fleet, and obliged the two sloops, as well as most other vessels having horses, to throw them overboard.

The INDIAN'S ODE to HOPE.

Hail, heav'nly HOPE, divinely fair!
 Inspir'd by thee now let me soar;
 High o'er the starry course ascend
 To seek th' calm elysian shore;

The seats eternal of the just,
 That happy land where Indians go,
 The brave, the gen'rous and the wise,
 Who practice all the good they know;

In rural walks, and flow'ry fields,
 For ever green, for ever gay,
 In lovely groves and blooming bow'rs,
 To pass the cheerful time away.

Sweet birds, melodious, too shall sing
 Their warbling notes the groves among,
 While crystal streams roll gently by,
 And murmur music to each song.

There winter's chill, nor summer's heat,
 Nor storm shall rise, nor thunders roll,
 For all the land is fill'd with peace,
 And rapture glows in ev'ry soul.

Ascend, O heav'nly HOPE ascend!
 And anchor there the soul secure,
 To ride this boist'rous sea of life,
 And gain at last that peaceful shore.

To the Printer of the ROYAL GAZETTE.

SIR,

Your giving the following account a place in your paper will much oblige your most humble servant,

A JERSEY LOYALIST.

IT would seem incredible to say that human nature could be so deprav'd as to delight in adding cruelty to distress, if recent instances did not evince the contrary.

That such as come under the above description may be held in durance, so as not to have it in their power to repeat such savage acts in future, is the only reason of this painful detail; of one of the many instances of barbarity exercised by Joseph Hedden of Newark, in New-Jersey, a rebel judge and justice, who, in the heat of summer 1777, issued his mandate to banish a helpless woman and children, for no crime, except her husband being a friend to his Majesty's government, and accordingly sent a rebel guard to execute his order; who, when they came to the house of the disconsolate woman, (six miles from Newark) found her very weak, and unable to travel, having been delivered of twins about fourteen days, which excited so much compassion in the guard as to cause them to forego their orders and return without the woman, which only produced a new and absolute decree from Hedden to bring her at all hazards to Newark, and from thence to be sent to Bergen, and when the rebel captain remonstrated to Hedden that executing his order would be the death of the woman. Hedden replied, Let her die there will be one damn'd Tory less; and accordingly the guard was sent the second time and brought her and her children in a waggon to Newark, although she fainted, (through weakness) on the waggon; when the woman arrived at Newark her deplorable case drew tears even from the eyes of rebels; and the kind offices of some friends of her sex enabled her the next day to go through the last stage of her journey to Bergen, where, (soon after) her death, and the death of her two innocent babes, closed the dismal tragedy.

If any should require satisfaction (as to the truth of the above narrative) please to call on the Printer.

tation of prices throughout their respective Jurisdictions, on the principles recommended in the resolutions of Congress.

NEW-YORK, March 20.

Jersey Intelligence.

Nothing can more clearly discover the exhausted Hopes of the Republican Politicians, than their late Propagation of Scraps from French and other Papers respecting Ireland. Governor Livingston has compiled them, and written an Introduction to lead the Populace to the Use he wishes to make of them—Three hundred Extra-Copies are struck off at the public Expence for the public Delusion—The Commissariat Parson of Elizabeth-Town, is flying about, in the utmost Anxiety, for his worldly Treasure, asserting that the Kingdom of Ireland has declared for the Congress—But not a Word said or printed of the late Addresses of the Irish Lords and Commons. Deacon London, of Fish-Kill, is sounding the same Trumpet, and without Doubt, the Importance of these Lies, like others, will cause them to be insinuated to a credulous Multitude, especially in the eastern Country, in Prayers and Sermons from the Pulpit. There are however, strong Marks of Terror in the introductory Composition of the Mob Governor. The Printer is able to give it to his Readers.

From the New-Jersey Journal, March 8.

I*t is impossible not to admire the spirit which animates the speakers in the Irish Parliament; so daringly pointed, and so expressive of Liberty and Independence, or not to wish Ireland a similar station among nations, as that we enjoy. And it is not now to be doubted, but that a people so long oppressed, and so ardent in their love of Liberty, will use the present moment to recover* their freedom; especially as they can have from the most powerful confederacy ever formed against England (as her King expresses it) every assistance they may want.

We cannot but judge of the humiliated condition of Great Britain, from the different reception of the Irish demands, for a free and unrestrained trade, &c. and the humble petitions of America. The one was treated with a silence the most disdainful and mortifying; the other with that hypocritical politeness which is afraid to offend, while at the same time it promises nothing. Our petitions were not even read. But Mr. Flood was most graciously received, and every thing promised to the Irish which mature deliberation would warrant.—This contrast of treatment, must sink his Britannick Majesty, if possible, still lower in the eyes of all Europe; nor is it to be supposed, that any power will think it wise or polite, to involve their fate with that of a nation evidently crumbling to pieces. We are authorized to say this in the following declaration of Lord North in the House of Commons on the 25th of November, 1779:—"I do not deny but that the conjuncture "was very alarming and dangerous; a powerful confederation was formed against Great-Britain, who even to this "very moment finds herself without allies: If this last "circumstance is disadvantageous, is it just that you should "blame the ministers?" The fact is, that no foreign power has judged it proper or necessary to espouse the cause of Great-Britain.

—The Pennsylvania Journal, March 22, 1780.

Mr. RIVINGTON,

I Find you have published in your paper a few of the many instances of barbarity of Mr. Justice Hedden, the most vile, base, and inhuman ever known in a civilized country, which Savages would blush to perform; yet give the Devil and his Imps their due, and publish also Justice Heddon's plea for his censured conduct, which is: That the many instances of his treating the Tories, called cruelty and inhuman, where done by the express orders and directions of his great patron Governor Livingston, who frequently declared him the best Magistrate in New-Jersey, often recommending his spirited behaviour as an example for other Justices to follow. Whether Justice Hedden's acting in obedience to the commands of a merciless tyrant, will exculpate him, or mitigate his guilt, is submitted to the public.

Justice Hedden being a necessary person among the rebels, ever ready to carry into execution the most tyrannical and oppressive measures against his Majesty's liege subjects, there can be no doubt but great artifice will be made use of by Governor Livingston, and others, to liberate him, that he may again be an instrument of persecution, ten-fold more cruel than ever.

To the KING's PRINTER,

SIR,

As the Jersey Refugee and Loyalist, in your papers, No. 360, and 362, have taken no notice of Robert Neil, who was made prisoner at the same time and place, with the Rebel Justice; and although he cannot vie with Hedden in some particulars, yet for robbing his Majesty's faithful subjects, for chicane, dissimulation and treachery, perhaps Neil may claim the bays: For proof thereof, please to insert in your Royal Gazette, the following specimen, which will oblige your very humble servant,

VERITAS.

THAT he came a few years ago from some part of Europe to New-York, where his fawning address gained on the credulity of some merchants to intrust him with a stock of goods, with which he opened a store at Newark, where after a fine run of custom, for above one year, he had the effrontery to turn bankrupt;

take the benefit of the act of insolvency, and pay his Creditors about ten shillings and six pence in the pound, which raised his credit so much with Phoebe, the daughter of Caleb, that he took her to wife; and on the arrival of his Majesty's troops in Newark, pretended to be a loyal subject to the King; applied for, and received ample protection of the King's officers; passed and repassed to, and from New-York, to Newark in safety, on his own business, until the Trenton defeat, which raised the drooping head of Rebellion, and caused the King's troops to evacuate Newark, which was immediately taken possession of by the Rebels, when the champignon suddenly grew to an enormous size, and displayed his Cameleon qualities. In short, Neil u[n]masked; and boasted, that he had taken protection among the King's troops, only to find out who were Tories; which declaration proved him a fit son of Rebellion, to be appointed to a lucrative post in their service, to provide forage and wood for the Rebel army, which office he executed to the great grief of some women, (whose husbands were in New York) by taking from them their grain and hay, but more especially, by seizing and cutting off several fine groves of wood, the property of the King's loyal subjects, for which he was paid by the Rebels, and thereby amassed a large estate.

As the Loyalist declares his design was only to prevent such unmerciful men from having it in their power to commit such savage acts in future I humbly conceive, that Neil ought to be held in custody, for the same reason.

Quere. As Neil has raised his fortune, by seizing and selling the property of some men in New-York, suffering for their fidelity to their Sovereign: Ought he not, in justice, to be held in custody, until he has made them satisfaction for the damages as far as he is able.

[If any person thinks the above portrait is not genuine, please to enquire of the Printer.]

PHILADELPHIA.

By accounts from Egg-Harbour we learn, that a few days since the Thames frigate and the cutter Retaliation (late the Revenge) were cruising off there. That the cutter had taken the sloop Hazard, from Hispaniola for this port, and ordered her for New York, when the Rattle-Snake fell in with, retook and sent her (the Ranger) into Egg-Harbour.

—The Pennsylvania Journal, March 22, 1780.

MR. COLLINS,

THE flaming production of your correspondent, A Farmer, had blazed away in the world for a considerable time before I saw it, in your No. 101. With your leave, Sir, I ask that gentleman the cause of his rage, discovered in this famous performance? Is it because I gave a sample of his nonsense, and declared my opinion of his jargon. As a new specimen of the latter, I desire the reader to guess at his meaning when he says, towards the conclusion of the peace under consideration, "and in lieu of the more virtuous part of the community's indemnifying the tories estates, I would recommend the mode of Virginia, where persons who breathe the air of liberty, and do not deserve pay for it;" and here he stops. If such jumble of words does not deserve the epithet, jargon, I confess I know not what does. And I humbly conceive that the evidences of nonsense and jargon do not license an anonymous author to obtrude his bare assertions upon the respectable public for proof. It is true, the ipse dixit or bare word of an ancient sage, influenced his pupils; but the man's virtue and solid judgment were universally acknowledged: but who is this Farmer, that his ipse dixit must pass for proof? Perhaps he is a farmer who cannot call a foot of land his own, and trembles at the issue of a little money he possesses.—I submit it to others, whether such characteristics in composition, are not descriptive of a dwarf in the literary world?—Here Mr. A Farmer, you have my reasons for my using the terms nonsense, jargon and pigmy of an author. If you can be gratified by fancying this to be Billingsgate eloquence, Grubstreet rhetoric and calumny, you have my leave for that satisfaction.

This gentleman seems here to put on the garb of reasoning, and pretends to prove,—The tendency of my writings to depreciate our currency,—The injustice of the plan I had recommended, &c. The first he attempts, by asserting that I had been at so much pains to prove the depreciation to be twenty for one, when the most virtuous part of the community sold at a much lower rate.—The first proposition is a palpable non-truth. All I have said upon the subject is bare supposition and mere opinion. I have said, No. III, "It is universally acknowledged that our paper currency is much depreciated, at a medium twenty for one, at the least." No. IV., "The Pennsylvania author before recited, asserts, that our money is depreciated on some articles ten, others twenty, others thirty: Supposing then we should take it at the medium, twenty for one." No. V, "Let us suppose that the depreciation is only fifteen for one at a medium, and I am positive it is that throughout the continent, if it is one farthing." No. VI, "If lands and houses, as they generally now sell, may also be considered as the barometer, then probably the depreciation would be, at a medium, ten for one." Here is the whole of what he calls proof:—I would blush to have offered this for argument! Still this dictator avers it to be so; and with an air of authority, oracle like, pronounces the depreciation at that time much lower. I am however still of opinion, that if a due enquiry was made, and the prices of imported articles, exclusive of the reasonable allowance for risk and charges, compared with those of the necessaries of life at that period, my suppositions and opinions would be found near the truth.—Behold the futilnes of his argument! But it is no wonder; for to prove what he undertakes is like holding a candle to the sun. Admirable! The bare suppositions and mere opinions of a piddling politician should have such powerful influence over all the continent, as in so short a time to increase the depreciation from, I do not know how low, to twenty for one. He may perhaps insist, saying, people have often offered that as a reason for asking so high.—And has he not more frequently heard the heavy taxes offered as a reason? How come such legislative depreciators to escape his notice?

He also, by a kind of argument ad hominem, attempts to prove, that I had received my money fifteen or twenty for one, long before my more virtuous countrymen did; because I was willing to part with it at that. His argument, syllogistically considered, stands thus,—None are willing to part with their money so, but only such as received it at that value long before their more virtuous countrymen did; but the Patriot is willing: Therefore he has received it so. Or thus, All who have received their money fifteen or twenty for one, long before their more virtuous countrymen did, are willing to part with it at that; but the Patriot is: Therefore, &c. Can your correspondent believe his major propositions, on which his conclusion depends? It appears to me impossible. If anything, it proves me (at least in this instance) an honest man; in desiring no more for my money than it cost me. And will it not be difficult for him to suggest reasons for my extortioning, without a desire for unlawful gain? He proceeds in some sort of dilemma,—"and if he has no money, he is an improper judge."—If I have neither money nor real property, I am an impartial judge. If only real property, he will allow I may sell for present enormous prices; and then have an equal chance with others to have mine appreciated. But I am weary of, and fear to tire my readers by animadverting on my antagonist's literary foibles; and therefore refer him, for farther particulars on this subject, to my former reply.

In his argumentative strain he arrogantly asserts, "that the contrary of my plans being most just, equitable, and salutary, is self evident."—Strange mortal! who sets himself to prove a self-evident proposition by queries already sufficiently answered; particularly in No. V, and my former reply. I beg leave to make a few remarks on the jumble of his queries. That part of those who have opposed the enemy in the field, have sold real property, and received the money, as he insinuates the Patriot believes. But I ask that Farmer, how much of that money they have now left? How much will be left after the two next taxes are paid? And how much will be left, when all the taxes shall be paid for this war, and making the immense sum of depreciated money good? After he shall have ascertained these particulars, he may judge what justice will be done to this great majority in his way. The Patriot knows there are still Tories among us. But suppose they have refused to sell for continental, is the specie they have hoarded up taxed more than continental, tho' much more in value? How then are they to be impoverished, and the whigs enriched, by making depreciated money good?—The Patriot knows that these bills of credit are made a legal tender. But is he the cause of that too? Is it therefore just that this great majority should be taxed to make millions and millions good to those who receive it twenty, thirty, forty or fifty for one? To exchange of one for twenty, where the one is equal in value to the twenty, is, with this just man, abominable robbery. Then to receive twenty for what truly is worth no more than one, is his justice: This is moral virtue indeed! Perhaps he may reply; This not to be the case with those who received it at the original value: I grant it as to its original value; but is their money worth more now? Why do they not purchase more for it? I defy this Farmer to prove injustice in the exchange of things of equal value. The horrible injustice such innocents have suffered, is evidently from the depreciation which has unjustly lowered the value of their money. And if the present possessors of such money must live of it, and pay taxes with it, at the depreciated value, for the space of thirteen or fourteen years after the war is over, can this gentleman suppose they will have any left worth the making good to them? Or must they, after their all is spent, labour and sweat to make millions good to others, who received it at the depreciated price? Is this the Farmer's pleading for innocent sufferers? Put this in contrast to what I proposed, namely, that whatever the money was depreciated, should be sunk at once by a tax on money itself, but such innocents exempted as much as possible. The consequence would be, that whatever such had left, would be immediately restored to its original value. But in this gentleman's opinion, this would be abominable robbery.

The remainder of this performance, until the recital of a paragraph out of Congress's address, I judge not deserving any farther answer.—In the recited paragraph Congress say, "To this end repeated attempts have been made to draw an absurd and fanciful line of distinction between the Congress and the people, and to create an opinion and belief, that their interests and views were different and opposed." I defy my opponent to bring one instance out of any of my publications, wherein I have attempted any such a thing: If so, the Congress can intend me, in what they say respecting the persons hereby described, no more than this famous Farmer, who has made so many addresses to them. He may reply, do they not say, garb of patriots. I suppose this master of hodge-podge of words now knows no other use for the word, Patriot, than to denote the signature I have assumed. I am confident that the sensible and virtuous part of our readers who will be at the pains of comparing my publications with the connexion of this recital, must believe this Farmer to be either a stupid numskull, or a wicked slanderer. As such I join issue with him, in his leave of me; and remain,

Sir, your's, and my country's friend,

A TRUE PATRIOT.

WHEREAS Isaiah Yard, of Trenton, has maliciously inserted in the New Jersey Gazette of the 15th inst. a caution to the public, with a view (no doubt) to prevent the sale of a plantation advertised by me in said Gazette. I do hereby inform the public that I can prove, by the very best authority, that neither the aforesaid Isaiah Yard, his father, nor grandfather, nor either of them, have or ever had right or title in said tract of land; and also that my right has been regularly derived from an indisputable title made by the then sheriff, on a legal sale, as appears by the record. - - - "But it seems his father's administrators were told, that they must wait till he, the heir, should become of age, before a deed could be obtained; and now, being of full age, is determined to defend his title." I readily agree with my friend Isaiah that he is not only "now of full age," but was twenty-one six or seven years ago; and further, that his father's administrators and himself have been resident in and about this place before and ever since he became of full age, and yet without being able to obtain any kind of title, notwithstanding his perseverance in a pretended claim. I would further add, that my predecessors and myself have been in full and quiet possession of said tract of land for more than twenty years past, occupying and disposing of the same at pleasure, in the most uninterrupted manner.—Whoever will choose to become the purchaser, may depend on receiving from me a sufficient title, and I will warrant and defend the same against any pretended claim or claimant.

NEW-YORK, March 23.

One of the most gallant Privateering Exploits has been lately performed by eleven determined refugee sailors from this port, that perhaps has happened during the present or any preceding war. These brave fellows having all been severely persecuted and repeatedly stripped of their properties by the rebels, found themselves reduced to circumstances detested by generous soaring minds, to remedy which they unanimously resolved to balance accounts with the authors of their misfortunes, or perish in the attempt. Last Monday se'nnight they embarked in a whale-boat, named the Lewis-Town-Revenge, Wilby, commander; armed with a swivel gun in her bow, eleven musquets and eleven pair of pistols. They passed Sand-Hook and proceeded to Egg-Harbour in the Jersies, where they found three privateers ready for Sea, and a 12 gun letter of marque schooner laden with lumber. Their number being inadequate to the force collected there, they pretended to be rebels, and spent an evening with those who were really such in the most social manner. From thence they sailed to the river Delaware, and in Morris's river, which falls into it, they captured a loaded vessel, after which they stood for Reedy Island, and alternately fell in with nine sail of vessels outward bound, eight of which they burned, and took one; they also made prize of three vessels carrying produce up to Philadelphia. During their cruize they discharged between fifty and sixty rebel prisoners, after exacting a parole that a British subject should be exchanged for each of them.

Last Tuesday morning they brought in three of their prizes, one, in which were two of the associated adventurers, they had the mortification to see retaken by whale boats off Cape May, when the lightness of the wind prevented assistance being given. The other is reported to have arrived at the Hook yesterday.

Those who have arrived were also attacked off Cape-May, but repulsed the assailants in doing which, one of the heroes received a wound in his arm by a splinter.

NEW-YORK, March 27.

Last Saturday Morning Mr. Mathias Halstead, of Elizabeth-Town, was brought to this City, and lodged in the Sugar-House: He was taken out of his own House the Evening before, by a Party of Refugees from Staten-Island: He was a Justice of the Peace under the Congress.

The following is a List of the Prisoners brought to this City last Thursday Night by the Parties that were lately at Paramus and Hackinsack, in New-Jersey, under the Command of Col. Howard, of the Guards, and Lieut. Col. M'Pherson, of the 42d Regiment.

Captain Abraham Herring, Edward Harvey, Christian O'Neil, Abraham Storms, Patrick Kirkin, John Kinney, Thomas Scotland, William Bradshaw, Ezekiel Burrell, Benjamin Marsh, John Clancey, John Armstrong, Andrew Lord, John Brady, William Browning, Charles Corper, George Field, James Teny, Peter Byall, James M'Donald, Thomas Dorman, John Coalby, William Stewart, John Williams, John Van Antwerp, John Bogart, William Provost, Henry Van Winkle, G. Van Wagenen, Morris Earl, John Durjee, John Bond, James Kent, Jacobus Brower, William Brower, John Van Giesen, Patrick Scentling, Ebenezer Spinnage, David Baldwin, Thomas Harris, Isaac Varvalen, Benjamin Old, Silas Frost, Peter Zabriskie, John Demarest, John Romayn, Gillion Barthoff, Joseph Williams, Rowland Hill, Charles Simmons, Jonathan Doramus, Christian Demarest, Charles Hugh, Isaac Denton, William Hammel[1], William Hammel, jun. David Colden; Will, Jack, John, Venter, and Hector (Negroes). —The New-York Gazette: and the Weekly Mercury, No. 1484, March 27, 1780.

NEW-YORK, March 29.

On Wednesday night the 22d inst. two detachments of the army were passed over the Hudson's River into Jersey; one from Kingsbridge, consisting of Three Hundred men from the Brigade of Guards under the command of Lieut. Col. Howard; the other from New-York of equal force, composed of the British and German Troops in Garrison, under the command of Lieut. Colonel Macpherson, of the 42d regt.

Lieut. Col. Howard's detachment landed at Kloster several miles above Fort Lee; the troops from the city at Wheehawk; the former were to penetrate into the country to the northward of Hopper's Town, and destined to attack the rear of the Rebel Cantoonments at that place; the latter taking their ROUTE by the little ferry upon Hackinsac: where boats were sent to transport them across, were to have surprized the town of Hackinsac, in which a company of Militia were quartered, and pushing forwards, to have fallen upon the front of the Paramus cantoonments: These services were not effected owing to unavoidable delays, 'till several hours later than was intended. Lieut. Col. Howard arrived near Hopper's Town, two hours after day break in the morning of the 23d, and continuing his march, surprised two pickets, and pressed one of their cantoonments so closely as to oblige the officer and his command to leave their arms behind them, which to the amount of above thirty stand were destroyed; their main body, consisting of between two and three hundred men made a shew of defence at the church, but finding they would be instantly attacked, they retired with precipitation, were pursued for above a mile, and several prisoners taken. Lieut. Col. Macpherson's detachment at this time upon its march through the cantoonments, which were found abandoned, made its appearance upon the road near the church, having taken a few prisoners.

Every further attempt to come up with the enemy, being impracticable, both detachments returned to Zabriskie's Mills, where being joined by the party left at Hackinsac, which had taken several prisoners, the troops retired by New-Bridge and the English Neighbourhood; Lieut. Col. Howard's detachment embarking near Fort Lee; Lieut. Col. Macpherson's with the prisoners continuing their march to Wheehawk, where boats were waiting to receive them.

One man of the Guards was killed, Capt. Anstruther of the 42d regt. and a few men were wounded upon the march towards the English Neighbourhood, the rebels in loose parties, keeping up an irregular fire upon the rear, and some men dropped behind from fatigue.

In the course of the march a Clergyman with another inoffensive inhabitant (taken prisoners by mistake) were dismissed, and are reported to have been accidentally shot by the Rebels.

Sixty-four prisoners were brought from Jersey, of those, twenty four belonged to the continental troops, and a Captain and twenty three were militia men: Thirteen deserters also, who were a part of the Paramus command, came off with their arms.—The loss of the Rebels in killed and wounded cannot be ascertained.

For the NEW-JERSEY JOURNAL.

To the CITIZENS of AMERICA.

ROUSÉD by the love of my country, for a moment I lay down my musket and take up my pen; and could I touch your hearts with the feelings of my own, you would not slumber over these bleeding States. You wish for peace, and to see the last limb of British tyranny cut off; and why has not the happy day arrived? Because you have not continued your exertions with becoming energy. Since the defeat and capture of the tyrant's army under General Burgoyne, the citizens of America have viewed our independence perfectly secure as the everlasting mountains;—and that we might continue a moderate war until the tyrant should sue for peace. In the mean time civil occupations, and objects of pursuit, proper for a state of peace have engrossed the general attention of the citizens. This, with the difficulty attending our money, has encouraged the tyrant to spin out the war, as his black envenomed heart stimulates him to fight while there is a shadow of hope.—By the good providence of God we have successfully opposed the enemy five campaigns, and are far advanced in the fourth year of independence. Let the tyrant do his worst, if this year is well improved, we shall cut him up root and branch, and annihilate his power in this part of the world for ever. To accomplish this, the citizens have only to execute the orders of Congress in raising the men and money required; and the soldiers to obey the orders of their General. I trust we shall do our duty; and surely they cannot think it harder to pay than to fight.—To hesitate because difficulties oppose the necessary measures, is childish and unworthy the magnanimity of freemen. Every one knows the burden of the times, that the most united and vigorous exertions are required; and shall the renowned citizens of America pause in the race of glory, because difficulties oppose them, and suffer their laurels to wither on the verge of immortality!—We have nothing to oppose us equal to what we have already surmounted; and were the difficulties ever so great, the precipice should kindle our ardor, and serve only as a spur to energy. This will probably be the last year of conflict, and he is unworthy to expand his lungs in the free air of America, who does not wish to perform something meritorious—who does not feel the animation of patriotism.

When the contest shall be closed, and the triumphant UNITED STATES shine in the historic page, and gild the wings of time,— then will the selfish and dastardly, who have been clogs instead of oil to our political wheels, blush with conscious shame.—They will be incapable of feeling the generous and sublime pleasures of patriotism. Amidst the universal joy, they will pine with poverty of soul, and wither while all creation blooms.

What is life or wealth without a noble use? They are not worth a wish; but to lay them out in purchase of freedom for the western world, is worthy of a noble soul, and will give pleasure to the mind which is solid and eternal. Then let us wake up the high-born passions, and forget temporary ease and interest until America rests in peace—Instead of repining at hard times, we may, in one point of view, regret they are not harder,—to give us opportunity to exhibit to the world still more striking examples of heroic virtue in the righteous cause of our country.—Hard times are the nurseries of wisdom, virtue, and fame; and laurels grow amidst distress, dangers and death.—We ought to rejoice that the ALMIGHTY Governor of the universe hath given us a station so honourable, and planted us the guardians of liberty,—while the greatest part of mankind rise and fall undistinguished as bubbles on the common stream.

If there is a wretch who says, in his heart, “I care not for fame, “or the freedom of posterity, if I may but have peace and wealth,”—his soul is scarcely big enough to animate his clay; and it matters not how soon he mingles with his kindred earth. Such contracted worthless minds are the burden of creation; these sordid spirits prolong the war by checking the necessary efforts; and if possible, they ought to be hunted out of the American world.—Thousands have expended their whole fortunes, and spilt their hearts blood, to save their country; and shall we advance with a slow step, and with a cold loitering hand complete a work so divine!—They who do not manifest a zeal to complete the salvation of their country, are, politically, dead, and fallen from the rank of humanity; and, being animated only by a selfish spirit, we may suppose if nine-tenths of the world were on fire they would be busy in making fortunes out of the remainder.—We ought to unite in the utmost abhorrence and detestation of this herd of miserly earth-worms, who sacrifice every thing to their idol gane; and we should give every possible encouragement and animation to the patriot citizens, that the flame may be re-kindled which shone so gloriously conspicuous in the beginning of the contest.—We should revolve in our minds the millions of reasons which urged us on to this illustrious conflict—they will speak to the heart in language more forcibly than a voice of thunder. At least half the whole family of mankind may be interested in our success; a prize so important was never before disputed on the stage of the world. We have every virtuous, every great and noble idea to animate our exertions; the superior Beings who inhabit other worlds, may behold our efforts with pleasing admiration—and the ETERNAL may look down with approbation and pleasure, while we contend for the rights of creation, and refuse to part with our divine inheritance.

A SOLDIER.

CHATHAM, MARCH 29.

Last Thursday morning a party of the enemy came out and penetrated into the country as far as Paramas. In their route, cruelty and devastation, the characteristic of the tyrant's troops, marked their steps. At Hackensack they burnt the court-house and two dwelling-houses, and almost tore the house of Mr. Campbell, inn-keeper, to pieces, after plundering him of a very considerable sum of specie and continental money. In short, they plundered indiscriminately both whig and tory. Their cruelty and brutality to the women was unparalleled; some they most inhumanly choaked to make them tell where their money was; and one, we hear, was so unfortunate as to have her arm broke by them. The militia of the county turned out spiritedly, and forming a junction with a few continental troops that lay at Paramas, pushed them, on their retreat, very hard, took a few prisoners, and killed and wounded several, whom they carried off in waggons.—Remember, apostate Britons! that your towns, during the last summer, have been in the power of our fleets; and that, perhaps, may be the case the ensuing one, when, taught by your example, we may retaliate ten fold.

Last Wednesday the Commissioners who met at Amboy, for the purpose of settling a cartel for the exchange of prisoners of war, broke up, having effected only the partial exchange of a few civil staff officers. It is to be hoped, however, their negociations will tend to the general releasement of all prisoners now in the hands of the enemy, altho' the powers of the British Commissioners were inadequate to the forming of a permanent cartel.

Last Friday night some villains from Staten-Island came over to Elizabeth Town and carried off Matthias Halsted, Esq; a worthy citizen.

Yesterday se'night Mr. Robert Hunt, of Elizabeth Town, was married to Mrs. Pollock, widow of the late Thomas Pollock, Esq.

Mr. KOLLOCK,

AS many false reports are circulated concerning the plan lately adopted by Congress, with respect to the money, it may give satisfaction to publish a brief state of that matter. It is thus:

The tax of fifteen million dollars monthly demanded from the United States, to be continued till April 1781. What arises from this tax, previous to this month, will be re-issued to pay debts, agreeable to contract. From this month forward, the money that comes in is to be destroyed, which will finish the whole of it by April 1781. To carry on the war, new money will be emitted by the United States, each State pledging itself for it's own quota, to be redeemed in six years, at 4s 6 sterling per dollar; of this no more than ten million to be, on any account, issued and that only in proportion as the money now circulating comes in.

By this plan public faith is preserved, the extremes, proposed by the tribes of scribblers, avoided, and notwithstanding Eumenes's prophecy to the contrary. I remain yours, &c.

U N S H A K E N .

William Livingston, Esquire,

Governor, Captain-General, and Commander in Chief in and over the State of New-Jersey, and territories thereunto belonging, Chancellor and Ordinary in the same;

P R O C L A M A T I O N .

Whereas the Honourable the Congress did, by their resolution of the eleventh day of March instant, recommend to the several states that Wednesday the twenty-sixth day of April next, be set apart and observed as a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer; that we may with one heart and one voice implore the Sovereign Lord of heaven and earth to remember mercy in his judgments; to make us sincerely penitent for our transgressions; to prepare us for deliverance, and to remove the evil with which he hath been pleased to visit us; to banish vice and irreligion from among us, and establish virtue and piety by his divine grace; to bless all public councils throughout the United States, giving them wisdom, firmness and unanimity, and directing them to the best measures for the public good; to bless the magistrates and people of every rank, and animate and unite the hearts of all to promote the interests of their country; to bless the public defence, inspiring all commanders and soldiers with magnanimity and perseverance, and giving vigour and success to the military operations by sea and land; to bless the illustrious sovereign, and the nation in alliance with these states, and all who interest themselves in the support of our rights and liberties; to make that alliance of perpetual and extensive usefulness to those immediately concerned, and mankind in general; to grant fruitful seasons, and to bless our industry, trade, and manufacturers; to bless all schools and seminaries of learning, and every means of instruction and education; to cause wars to cease, and to establish peace among the nations:—I HAVE THEREFORE THOUGHT FIT, by and with the advice of the Honourable Privy Council of this state, to appoint the said twenty-sixth day of April next, to be set apart and observed as a day of fasting, humiliation, and prayer, throughout this state, for the purposes in the said resolution of Congress mentioned; and I do hereby recommend it to the ministers of the gospel of every denomination in this state, to perform devine service, and to the people committed to their charge, to attend on public worship on that day, and to abstain thereon from all servile labour and recreations inconsistent with the solemnity of the festival.

Given under my Hand and Seal at Arms, in Trenton, the twenty-first day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and eighty, and in the fourth year of the independence of America.

WIL. LIVINGSTON.

By His Excellency's command, Bowes Reed, Secretary.

God save the People.

Mr. Collins,

YOUR correspondent Honestus, in your No. 102, seems a lover of combat; If he had any other view, it probably has been the grand desideratum, viz. How to raise the necessary supplies, without doing farther injustice to individuals.

As this gentleman appears in the garb of reasoning, and therein broaches some matters of importance, I hope the candid publick will excuse me in particularly canvassing some of them.

He says, he has proved in three words that regulation is a solecism in politicks. Can he be in earnest? Suppose A stands for the quantity of trade, and B for the circulating medium, what authority has he for saying $A = B$, or that A is equal B? Perhaps he may find it difficult to prove this equality in any nation. I confess it would be to the advantage of society if they could be made and kept equal. But the contrary is obvious from the daily rise and fall of prices, which, in the main, are the struggles of trade to restore this equality. This equilibrium is broke, and becomes fluctuating by various causes. Congress distinguishes them into natural and artificial. The natural is sometimes in A, when the surplus of trade gluts the market, or its scarcity, the money. Sometimes in B, when the money is either superabundant or deficient for an ordinary market. Where the circulating medium is specie, and trade without extraordinary embarrassments, the rise or fall of the one or other will naturally pretty near restore the necessary equilibrium, without greatly endangering the community.—The artificial are monopoly, ingrossing, forestalling &c. the sources of extortion. This produces an artificial scarcity in A, and when these base arts are practised in the necessaries of life and conveniencies, it most powerfully forces the money to an equality with this artificial scarcity. This will appear evident from our present situation. If we suppose twenty millions of dollars original value equal to our present trade, and the current prices, in proportion to wheat, fifty for one, then the two hundred millions, now in circulation will purchase no more than four millions formerly; and can this gentleman suppose that sixteen millions less leaves the remaining four equal to the natural quantity of our trade? If we suppose twenty millions, as before, then ten dollars continental ought to purchase one bushel of wheat, and other things in proportion: Consequently the arts and villainies of speculators have caused A to become equal to five times B. Is this no solecism in politicks. I leave Mr. Honestus to judge of the conclusive force of his algebraical argument, and beg his leave to assert, That it is the indispensable duty of government, in our present situation, to regulate prices, and of the community to support them in the execution. This position I will attempt to prove, though not in three words. I humbly conceive my assertion will appear evident from the following considerations:

1. Necessity may be plead in the natural depreciation, or increase of prices from one to ten; but from ten to fifty, can have no other cause but speculation. Honestus will allow that such speculation is a solecism in politicks, pregnant with ruin to thousands. And is not civil government instituted for the purpose of preventing practices ruinous to the community? Perhaps he may reply, let then particular laws be enacted against speculation, and trade remain free. But I conceive that a candid review of our present situation will convince of the contrary.—We are a new country, chiefly subsisting by agriculture; dependent on foreign nations for most of the conveniencies of life; separated by the vast Atlantic, and involved in a war which has almost cut off our commercial intercourse with them: Hence has the scarce market of foreign articles soon enticed speculators to ingross them, and hold them at what price they pleased. The raising of an army took many mechanicks and tradesmen (before too few to manufacture for the necessities of the community) and so left it in the power of the rest to set what price they thought proper upon their labour. The consumption and destruction of the war has made an urging (sic) demand upon the husbandmen for the necessaries of life, who, by with-holding, may force any price. These opportunities have been so well improved by the citizens of America, that in every class a sufficient number are become sufficiently expert in extortioning upon the other, to draw the remainder (though reluctantly) with them. From such general opportunities for extortion has undoubtedly proceeded the universal rise of prices so far above the necessary circulating medium. The opposers of a regulation have boldly asserted, that if government stopped the money-press and taxed largely, the money would appreciate. But I think by this time sad experience must have convinced them of the contrary. Yea, this habit of extortion begins to force specie into circulation, and to depreciate it the moment it peeps out. From these matters of fact it appears exceeding probable to me, that if at this day we were to obtain a sufficient circulation of specie only, and the war to continue as hitherto, the rise of prices would soon involve this nation in a tenfold worse dilemma than at present: Hence is evident that particular laws will not remedy such a general evil; and therefore think I may fairly conclude, that it remains the indispensable duty of government to prevent the progress of this pernicious and general evil by a prudent and general regulation.

2. Similar laws and cases will prove this. Why is the interest of money regulated? Why have laws been passed against forestalling, &c? only because here were evident opportunities for pernicious extortion. And if the safety of comparatively a few in the community has demanded the interposition of government, how much more where the evil is become predominant, and the whole community exposed to its baneful influence?

3. In the last place, I argue from the absolute necessity of such a measure; which is evident on the one hand from the ruinous effects this monstrous rise of prices has produced; and the other, the fruitless attempts to stop its progress any other way. How many thousands of the most inoffensive and defenceless have suffered loss and ruin by this extensive evil? Yea, how are the whole of our military operations clogged by it? How can we possibly keep and support an army, if the progress of this evil is not checked? Double all the money in circulation cannot support it one year. Every friend of this country must tremble at the issue, if no remedy is found—And what remedy can be found but a general regulation? Congress have addressed, and pointed out the danger; the oppressed have mourned and complained; legislatures have enacted laws against monopolizers and forestallers; government has waited to see whether trade would regulate itself; but all to no purpose—the evil still increases. What then must we do? Must government sit still, fold their hands, and see ruin and destruction come upon us as an armed man? God forbid! The general evil indicates the general remedy; which only is, a prudent general regulation: And if civil government cannot do this, it cannot answer the purpose of its institution. I much doubt whether anarchy itself is more destructive to the property of individuals, and more dangerous to the publick weal, than this unrestrained rise of prices has been to us.

The stale saying, Trade must regulate itself, holds good where the requisite circumstances correspond; but ours manifestly indicate an exception to this rule.

But say some, a general regulation is not possible.—Why not? Is not interest regulated? Is there not a standard of profits in trade which custom has settled in all nations? Whence can this impossibility arise?

Having thus candidly offered my reasons for a general regulation, I submit them freely to the judicious and impartial reader. I desire however to observe that there appears to me a manifest difference between regulating laws and laws to appreciate our money. The former prevents men from oppressing their neighbours by unreasonable gain: The latter would unjustly take the property from one and give it to another; per example, It is just that the law prohibits the lender of taking more than lawful interest from the borrower; but it would be manifestly unjust if that law obliged the borrower to pay double the principal. Also individuals or the publick purchase for the current price and value of the money this month, the next a regulation takes place, which fixes the prices lower: Now whatever the prices are lowered, is taken from the buyer and given to the seller. If the greater part of money was so appreciated in the hands of the sufferers by the depreciation, there would be some plausibility for it; but the greatest of these sufferers have the least for our extravagant markets. The standard of the prices, according to which it appears to me a regulation ought to be made, is not the sudden start of prices in one or the other state, but the medium throughout the empire; what this is, I am not competent to judge.—I have heretofore freely given my sentiments on the subject of the appreciation of our money, and have seen no reasons for altering them; and therefore beg to be excused in offering the foregoing remark.

As a general regulation seems a matter of importance, I have endeavoured to shew its justice, propriety, and necessity. Perhaps some other important hints of your correspondent Honestus may demand a farther explanation of my sentiments.

I am, Sir, &c.

A True Patriot.

Extract of a letter from Hackinsack, dated March 24.

“Yesterday morning at 4 o'clock, a detachment of the enemy of about 200 men, commanded by Lt. Col. M'Pherson, of the 42d regt. made a descent upon this place by way of the Little Ferry. Soon after they entered the town they burnt the Court-house, and also Messrs. Boyd's and Chapple's dwelling-houses, and then proceeded to Paramus, with intention to surprize the detachment of continental troops under the command of Major Stuart. At that place the enemy were joined by another party of equal force, which landed at Closter and marched by Weirmiss, and would probably have effected their purpose had not Major Stuart received information of their approach. In their rout they plundered and abused the inhabitants indiscriminately, in a most pitiable manner; and carried off between 20 and 30 of the inhabitants prisoners. Capt. Outwater of our militia, and Hendrick Van Geison, were slightly wounded, but not taken off. In this excursion the enemy had a number killed and wounded, and near 20 of them were made prisoners by our troops, who behaved exceedingly well; and hung upon their rear as they retreated from Paramus to Fort Lee, where they embarked."

At the last sitting of the General Assembly of this state, the following laws were passed:

1. An Act for suspending the operation of an act, intituled, An Act for limiting the prices of various articles, and to prevent the withholding from sale the necessaries of life.

2. An Act to alter the place of meeting of the Justices and Freeholders, in the county of Hunterdon.

3. A supplemental Act to an act, intituled, An Act to empower and direct the Commissioners of the loan-offices in the respective counties, in the state of New-Jersey, to pay certain monies by them received into the treasury; and also for applying certain monies now therein.

4. An Act for compleating the quota of the troops belonging to this state, in the service of the United States.

5. An Act for amending and establishing the charter of the college of New-Jersey.

6. An Act to secure to the owners of lands lying in the north ward of New-Brunswick, in the county of Middlesex; and in the eastern precinct of the county of Somerset adjoining, the enclosures of which have been destroyed in the course of the present war, the use and benefit of the said lands.

7. A supplemental Act to the act, intituled, An Act for apprehending and delivering up to justice all persons residing or taking refuge in this state, charged with crimes committed in any other of the United States; and for other purposes therein mentioned.

8. An Act to prevent the waste of timber, trees, and poles, in this state, and to repeal the former act for that purpose.

9. An Act to amend an act, intituled An Act for the regulating, training and arraying of the militia, and the supplementary act thereto.

10. A supplemental Act to the act, intituled, An Act for procuring provisions for the use of the army, and other supplies for carrying on the war; and for settling the publick accounts of this state.

11. An Act to empower the owners of Pigeon swamp, marshes, and ponds adjoining, in the south ward of New-Brunswick, in the county of Middlesex, to open and keep clear of obstructions a certain water-course and ditch for draining the said swamp, marshes, and ponds.

12. An Act for raising certain fees, fines, and forfeitures.

13. An Act for defraying sundry incidental charges.

FISH-KILL, March 30.

On Thursday, the 23d instant, a party of British and foreign troops, from New-York, supposed about 400, advanced as far as Paramus, where they surprised a small guard, carried off a few prisoners, and in their usual manner, plundered several houses: The militia collected fast, and attacked them furiously—several of our prisoners were relieved:—Mr. Periam, tutor of the academy at Paramus, was made prisoner; but he being wounded by our people in the Enemy's retreat, was left behind;—he was badly wounded in the shoulder; but is in a likely way to recover. We have good information that the Enemy had three or four waggons full of killed and wounded—their retreat was so precipitate, that when any of their dead and wounded fell off the waggons, they did not tarry to take them up.—The Hackensack militia behaved with spirit, and sustained but little loss. The Enemy burnt, in this excursion, the court-house in Hackensack, and one or two dwelling-houses; they plundered Mr. Campbell, tavern-keeper, of a large sum of Continental, hard money, &c.

It appears that this party came out solely with an intention to plunder and rob.—Though they distress a few, they can subdue the spirits of none, but on the contrary, render them still more determined to oppose their rapacious enemy. The spirits of freemen are not to be depressed by horse-thieves, house-breakers and such ragamuffins.—Such are the British measures, and such is the conduct of the tools of despotism, which they have invariably pursued during the present war.

Three Thousand Dollars Reward.

DRIPPED from the Subscriber's horse, in the alarm at Paramus, by the approach of the Enemy, on Thursday the 23d inst. a pair of black leather saddle-bags, containing the following articles, viz. Four ruffled and one plain shirts, one pair black worsted stockings, one pair light coloured do. three pair ribbed white thread do. all marked I. C. two pair mixed coloured cotton stockings, five or six stocks and cravats, three pair linen drawers, one cotton and one linen cap, a pair of blue spotted mittens, a large plain gold stock-buckle, a razor strap case, containing two fine razors; two hatter's bow-strings, a Morocco leather pocket-book, on it the Subscriber's name in gold letters, containing sundry papers; a tin paper case, containing sundry letters, accounts sales, accounts current, &c three Bandana silk handkerchiefs, a pair of shoes, partly wore; a large parcel of Continental money, and twelve loan-office certificates, and a few hard dollars. Eleven of the loan-office certificates, are taken in the name of the Subscriber, and one in the name of Josiah Crane Hook and Matthew Quick,¹ for 400 dollars, all taken out of the loan-office in Philadelphia.

If any of the above-mentioned certificates are offered for sale or negotiated; it is earnestly requested they may be stopped; should any of the above articles be discovered, it is hoped the person who possesses said article may be secured, and search made in order to find out the person who feloniously secrets the same.

Two or three days after the loss of the above-bags, they were found in a field, near Mr. Garret Hopper's mills, cut open and the contents taken out; a power of attorney that was in them, was found near them, clean and unsullied, (as if it had been just taken out.) From this circumstance it is supposed that the bags did not fall into the hands of the British, or the power of attorney would have been destroyed by the rains, which fell at that time; It therefore seems probable they have been taken by some of our soldiers, or some of the inhabitants of Paramus.

Any person or persons who can give information of the above articles, so that they may be recovered, shall receive the above reward, and in proportion to the articles recovered.

—The New-York Packet, March 30, 1780. No. 167.

Mr. COLLINS,

HONESTUS having dispatched regulation in three words, demands to know, "Suppose all the money was called in, and one given for twenty, agreeable to the plan recommended by the True Patriot, what was then to be done? whether the same scene of iniquity is to be again repeated; and thousands again to be ruined by a second inundation of paper money?"—I answer: That gentleman must have seen, that I recommended as part of the plan, to procure (if possible) a sufficient quantity of specie, and give that in exchange, sinking whatever the money should be found, on an average, to have depreciated: If that could not be done, then to do it by new emissions; at the same time regulating laws should be passed, to secure the money at this value to the possessors. As this would stamp an invariable value upon the money, the army might be supplied by contract, and millions of waste prevented; and then the necessary supplies raised by taxes. The difficulties this gentleman here objects are evidently founded on his supposed futility of regulation; the contrary of which I flatter myself to have sufficiently proved.

Suppose the money should be called in, as I have before proposed; or let it be by taxes in the ordinary way: Per example; New-Jersey collects by the two ensuing taxes nine millions, and the other states in proportion; let not a dollar of this be re-issued but sunk, and new emitted on a different plan, and the present necessities supplied therewith. If the common convenience of the empire could admit that each state emitted its own money, I am persuaded this would tend greatly to preserve the value. In such case the staple commodity of the state might be made the standard of the value of their money; for instance, in New-Jersey the money to be emitted in some such form as this: This bill shall pass current in New-Jersey for one Spanish milled dollar, or sixty lb. of wheat, pursuant to an act, &c. Let the law make this money the only lawful tender for all payments of debts contracted before the commencement of the depreciation, and those to be contracted after the new emissions; and the prices of all other articles be regulated in proportion to that of wheat. Then in order to preserve the strictest equity and justice in trade, the debtor should be permitted, in case wheat should depreciate by an overstocked market, to tender that in payment; and the creditor in case money should again depreciate, in spite of law, to demand the wheat or the amount of it in money. It appears to me that such money in its very nature would prove an effectual bar against depreciation: For the creditor would have something real and unchangeable to depend on, and the debtor would not be tempted to extortion in order to pay his debts with money not worth one-fortieth part of the property he contracted it for. It seems to me such money (in our present circumstances) would be preferable to specie itself; which in our situation, would be subject to depreciation as well as continental.

Now let Honestus judge, would this or a similar method be calculated to repeat again the same scene of iniquity? If money had once acquired stability, and the annual supplies for the war could not be raised by taxes, the deficiency might be supplied by internal loans or annuities. and in case of necessity a foreign loan might then prove advantageous; and duties on the superfluities of life could afford an additional sum. By such means a second ruinous inundation of paper money would be prevented.

But while that gentleman is objecting ungrounded difficulties to "this and that plan," has he duly considered his own?—The Patriot's plan has not been adopted; the money press has been stopped; taxation and loans tried; and has "the scene of iniquity" stopped? Compare the present prices with those at the period of my former publications, and see the progress of that "scene of iniquity." Let him project his views, and judge where it most probably will stop if no effectual remedy is applied.—He is persuaded "that the grand desideratum, namely, to be able to raise the necessary supplies without doing farther injustice to individuals, can only be effected by taxations and loans." How far foreign loans and mortgaging America for them will go, I do not pretend to ascertain; but taxations and internal loans I am persuaded cannot possibly effect it. This seems evident from the nature of the depreciation, which has constantly exceeded the quantity of the money. The press was stopped at the sum of two hundred millions, and the supplies Congress demanded were rated twenty fold; but immediately upon this the depreciation increases thirty, forty, fifty fold: here the supplies must unavoidably fall short the half. Hence inevitably follows exorbitant demands upon the public treasury, and a great diminution of the circulating medium. The natural result is the publick demands money by tax to pay off arrearages to a great amount; individuals demand those arrears to be thereby enabled to pay the tax.—Can Mr. Honestus possibly see the dilemma? Again, our present circulating medium appears to be about four millions of dollars original value: can he believe that less than double that sum will afford supplies for our military operations? Can he suppose it possible to collect, in one year, double the circulating medium by taxations and loans? or are these his desiderata to work miracles? Though our money was no better than straw, in such an attempt the former would afford as effectual an instrument of tyranny over our community, as the latter the Egyptians over the Israelites. Mr. Honestus, what is to be done then? Is the same scene of iniquity to be again repeated? Are thousands more to be ruined by a farther inundation of our present paper money? If the daily increase of depreciation is to force an increase of the quantity, and this to support and nourish the depreciation; I again repeat the question, What is to be done?

These dangers I have clearly foreseen, and ventured to lay them before the respectable publick at a period its pernicious consequences might have been prevented. I am fully conscious of my sincere intentions in that attempt; and it affords me satisfaction, that amidst the virulent reflections and low scurrility I have met with on account of these my publications, the arguments I have offered in support of my assertions, have hitherto remained unattacked. And I could not then, nor can I now, but be persuaded that America will see the time (if they do not in some measure already) that she will become fully convinced that if this, or a similar plan had been pursued, not only the community but also thousands of individuals, even the married men themselves, would have been greatly benefitted by it; and doubt not but a despair of conquering us by our money, would have induced our enemies to consent to a safe and honourable peace; which would have concluded the scene of our calamities of war.

The supposition,—“Indeed could we suppose Congress wicked enough,” &c. with some of his mysterious and ambiguous assertions, seem to contain some interesting matters which demand serious consideration; but must dismiss that gentleman for the present.—And remain, Sir, &c.

CHATHAM (New-Jersey,) March 15.

Sunday afternoon, the 5th instant, the Good-Hope prison ship, lying in Wallabout-bay in the East-river in New-York, was entirely consumed. We do not hear that any lives were lost.

A number of our last papers, containing an account of the late proceedings in Ireland, being sent to the army by his Excellency, gave them the greatest satisfaction, and fan'd the glorious flame of liberty in their breasts. As elegant a collation as the shortness of the time would permit was provided by the officers of Colonel Jackson's regiment: A number of toasts were drank, and the night concluded with music, and a new cotillion, called the Duke of Leinster. The following toasts were drank.

1. St. Patrick. 2. The Duke of Leinster. 3. Lord Shannon. 4. Mr. Gratton. 5. Mr. Ogle. 6. Mr. Edward Newenham. 7. The Recorder. 8. Mr. Flood. 9. The Memory of Dr. Lucas. 10. The volunteers of Ireland. 11. May the cannon of Ireland bellow till the nation is free. 12. The King of France. 13. General Washington and the army.

TRENTON, APRIL 5.

By a gentleman who left New-York on Sunday sennight, we are informed that part of the transports that sailed with Sir Henry Clinton in December for Charlestown, had arrived from that place at New-York, with orders from Sir Henry Clinton for reinforcement: In consequence of which, a brigade consisting of 4000 troops, were preparing for embarkation, and was expected to sail the latter end of last week, under the command of Lord Rawdon, who has been lately appointed a Brigadier-General.

Last week a party of the enemy landed at Tenton¹ Falls, in Monmouth county, and carried off 6 or 7 of the inhabitants prisoners.—Another small party which landed at Middletown, carried off a Mr. Bowne, who had but three days before been exchanged, and just returned home.

The Court of Oyer and Terminer, which opened at Hillsborough, in Somerset county, last week, is adjourned to meet at the same place the 22d day of May next.

Whereas Isaiah Yard, of Trenton, has maliciously inserted in the Pennsylvania Packet of March 28, a caution to the public, with a view (no doubt) to prevent the sale of a Plantation advertised by me in the said Packet. I do hereby inform the public that I can prove, by the very best authority, that neither the aforesaid Isaiah Yard, his father, nor grandfather, nor either of them, have or ever had right or title in said tract of land; and also that my right has been regularly derived from an indisputable title made by the then Sheriff on a legal sale, as appears by the record.—“But it seems his father’s administrators were told that they must wait till he, the heir, should become of age before a deed could be obtained; and, now, being of full age is determined to defend his title.” I readily agree with my friend Isaiah that he is not only “now of full age,” but was twenty-one, six or seven years ago; and further that his father’s administrators and himself have been resident in and about this place before and ever since he became of full age, and yet without being able to obtain any kind of title notwithstanding his perseverance in a pretended claim. I would further add, that my predecessors and myself have been in full and quiet possession of said tract of land for more than twenty years past, occupying and disposing of the same at pleasure, in the most uninterrupted manner.—Whoever will choose to become the purchaser may depend on receiving from me a sufficient title, and I will warrant and defend the same against any pretended claim or claimants.

NEW-YORK, April 19.

The following is published from good Authority.

Upon Saturday last the 15th inst. a cavalry detachment of about 120 men, composed of the 17th dragoons, Queen's Ranger Hussars, Diemar's Hussars, and Lieut. Stuart's volunteers, drawn from Staten Island, with a body of 312 infantry, composed of 12 Jagers, 150 men of the regiment of Bose, 100 men of the regiment Mirbach, and 50 men of the Loyal American Regiment, drawn from York Island; the whole under the command of Major Du Buy of the regiment of Bose, were landed in the Jersies, the cavalry near the extremity of Bergen Neck, the infantry near Fort Lee, forming a junction in the English Neighbourhood, the whole detachment proceeded to the New Bridge upon Hackinsac, which they reached between 2 and three o'clock in the morning of the 16th, having fallen in with a rebel patrole at that place, under the command of an officer who was taken prisoner with three of his men, the others making their escape; continuing their march to Paramus, Major Du Buy came in sight of the church a little after day-break, and finding the rebels had fallen back to Hopper's-town; he kept on his march 'till discovered by a picket posted at the bridge upon Saddle Creek, who giving their fire, were instantly charged by the advanced guard of cavalry, and the greatest part of them either killed or taken prisoners.

The cavalry were immediately directed to push forwards to Hopper's, which they soon reached and spiritedly attacking a superior body of infantry in connected cantonments, carried several houses, before the infantry, who made every possible exertion, could reach the place of action, at which however they arrived in time to complete the object of the incursion.

In retiring, small parties of militia, with a few of their troops, who had been upon out duties, kept hovering round the detachment in different directions, and altho' unable to make any impression, they incommoded the march of the troops by a constant scattered fire from different quarters, but with little effect, altho' they continued their attempts to the place of embarkation viz Fort Lee, at which the infantry arrived between 3 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon, the cavalry taking the same route by which they advanced; eight deserters with their arms joined the detachment early in the morning.

Encomiums upon the behaviour of the troops are not necessary, altho' merited; it is sufficient to observe, that the incursion was well conducted, and executed as may ever be expected from good troops, led by officers of knowledge and experience.

Return of the killed, wounded and missing of the troops at the affair at Hopper's-town the 16th inst. 17th light-dragoons,

Return of the killed, wounded and prisoners of the rebel detachment at Hopper's town upon the 16th Instant.

Killed 40, wounded, left behind, believed about 10, taken prisoners, of whom many are wounded 51. Exclusive of the officers, of whom one was killed upon the spot; the major who commanded and another officer left badly wounded; two captains, two lieutenants and two ensigns taken prisoners.

Last Saturday a Rebel Brig Privateer of 8 guns and 52 men, was driven on shore about half a mile from the Light-House at Sandy Hook, by his Majesty's Ship Galatea, Capt. Reed, the crew are prisoners, and the vessel will probably be saved—the same day was driven on shore at Deal Beach, 12 miles off the Hook, another rebel privateer brig, by his Majesty's ship Vulture, Capt. Sutherland; the above are from Rhode Island, one called the Rattle Snake, and the other the Black Snake, they sailed in company with two privateer sloops.

Last Saturday morning the 15th instant, a Rebel Privateer Brig was driven on shore near Sandy-Hook, by the Galatea. The crew consisting of six officers and forty-five seamen, quitted their vessel and attempted to escape into the country; but being observed by the Officer commanding at the Light-House, a detachment was immediately sent in pursuit of them under the command of Lieut. Leonard, by whose address and gallant behaviour, the whole were made prisoners: They arrived in this city upon Sunday evening.

Mr. COLLINS.

MR. Honestus proceeds, and shews himself as lavish of censure without reason, as of proof without foundation. He says, "Indeed could we suppose Congress wicked enough to make the experiment, &c." Who does not now see that all the arguments I have offered in support of the equity and justice of that plan, are effectually confuted by the bare, though bold, assertion of this master of algebraical reasoning? Who perhaps may suppose justice and equity wickedness et vice versa. Why has he not proved the charge in three words?—Can it be possible that he charges wickedness upon giving the full value to a person for his money, and to secure him from future loss in it? If so, then I suppose robbing twenty to pay one twenty-fold the value of his money, must be his justice.—Or is it, exempting, as much as possible, the inoffensive and defenceless orphans, widows, and superannuated, in such a tax, and thereby restoring the money they may have preserved to its original value? If so, then I suppose the hastening progress of what will soon bring all such to lamentable beggary, must be his virtue.—Or is he harping upon the old cord, a breach of national faith? If so, why may a gentleman, who can prove the futility of regulation in three words, not have indulged me with the proofs I have repeatedly requested of such assertors? But let me be permitted to prosecute this favourite topick of some, a little farther. I humbly conceive Congress, the august representative body of the empire, to lay under the obligation of more than one kind of faith respecting the nation they represent. This nation has entrusted them with their purses for its defence. Do not the most solemn obligations demand their faith in the application of this money; and their most vigorous exertions in this defence? If then any future Congress should manage matters so, that the greater moiety of their constituents should become obliged, by the appreciation of this money, to launch out millions not for the government or defence of the nation, but to fill the purses of a herd of depreciating speculators, who have preyed upon our vitals in an hour of distress: Would this be consistent with the faith they owe their constituents?—Or suppose they should be so intent and attached to this appreciation, that, for the sake of it, they should neglect the military operations for the defence of the nation, and destruction, in part or whole, should thence ensue; or they be constrained to consent to a disadvantageous and dishonourable peace: Would this be their faith to the nation?—Would not all the distress, all the bloodshed, all the destruction, all the disadvantage and dishonour all consequent on such neglect, be laid to their charge?

From the foregoing observations it appears how exceeding careful such bodies ought to be in pledging the national faith, lest the nation should be led into the dreadful dilemma of breaking its faith, or ruining the greater part of the community. But let assertors of the pledged faith for the appreciation of this money shew whether it is pledged for the whole or part. If the whole, then Congress has been guilty of the most unparalleled profusion of the publick's money that any government ever has been; to spend, in the course of three years, for the support of a war no more extensive than ours, so many hundred millions of Spanish milled dollars: Then would the nation be under an absolute necessity of breaking this pledged faith, because there is a moral impossibility to fulfil it. If only in part, let them point out which part. The faces of the bills are all of the same import. I repeat the question; for which of these bills is this faith pledged?—Perhaps some may alledge the resolves of Congress for the redemption of these bills, and thence infer, if the quantity is reduced the value must increase until it arrives to its original value. I frankly acknowledge, this faith is pledged for the redemption of the bills. And so it ought to be. But is there the least shadow of reason that it is therefore pledged for the consequence*?

They have resolved that the whole shall be sunk in eighteen years; is it a breach of faith if it is done in one? The different Legislatures are to sink it by tax; has Congress pledged this faith that money shall not be taxed for sinking it? If then a tax on money its self is found just, and the least burdensome and ruinous to the community at large, how can the redemption of the depreciated part, by such a tax, infringe this National faith? Yea, if the remaining value was established and secured the same as it originally was, would not this coincide with the spirit of the foregoing inference? Has not this money sunk and lost the half or two-thirds of its value since the time this plan was recommended? which, I am confident, would have been preserved, if such plan had been then adopted. And who knows where the sinking of its value will stop?

On a candid review of the foregoing observations, I am truly at a loss to find on what that gentleman founds his bold charge of wickedness.

But if this gentleman could suppose Congress wicked enough to make the experiment, he dubiously infers, “happily they would find it

* The argument, that as the quantity decreases, the value must increase, I humbly conceive not to be conclusive in this case; because this deficiency may be supplied by specie or barter. It is manifest that the whole now is about equal in value to what four millions was three years ago: Then if thirty millions is a necessary medium, this falls short twenty-six millions. Why then does not this deficiency appreciate the money? Why does it continue depreciating? It appears to me, that the nature of trade will operate as powerfully against the appreciation as speculation does now in favour of the depreciation: For, in that case, the trader must sell for less than he gave, in hopes of gaining in value what he lost in quantity. But are the generality of traders inclined to such hazards? Will such hazard serve their present purposes? It is also evident that such money will afford the greatest profits by being laid up, which will unavoidably destroy commerce, or force another medium. In the latter this money will become useless; and the different Legislatures fall under an absolute necessity to collect taxes for sinking this money, in the medium which shall circulate at a certain value, and then fix the course of exchange; which cannot be high for a thing that had become useless. If then from such natural causes the money shall never appreciate, will this violate the pledged faith of the nation?

impracticable."—Towards the conclusion of my sixth number I have said, "should the plan I have recommended, or any similar one, appear to our Legislature or our representatives in Congress, proper to be pursued, prudence will dictate to them not to undertake so uncommon and bold a step, without being previously assured that you (my fellow-citizens) will cordially support them in the execution, when resolved upon." I feel confident there would not have been a thousandth part of the hazard to make the experiment in this manner, there will be in attempting to appreciate this money by law or taxes on real property, nor of danger there is to the whole empire in pursuing the same line of conduct, hitherto done with respect to this money.

But says Honestus, "indeed it is not easy to conceive how the mere alteration of certain characters, &c. could relieve us of any part of the burden which the support of the war necessarily brings upon us." I say, an alteration of mere characters in new emissions on some such foundation as I have before mentioned, would greatly alleviate our burdens. This I attempt to prove by the following arguments:

1. Multitudes of the yeomanry of America, the bulwark of our safety, look on our enormous nominal debt for which, as Congress tells them, their estates stand mortgaged, with concern and dread. This is a consideration which evidently tends;—To discourage them;—To cause them to fret at their rulers;—To suspect government;—To pay taxes with reluctance; for say they, what does it avail to pay taxes? The debt still increases manifold upon us. Now, such change of figures would at once relieve us from this burden. Though our true national debt amounts in fact to a trifle, yet the nominal obligation is rose to an enormous sum.—Just like a man's having obtained and obligation from me by mere dint of extortion and fraud, conditioned for the payment of four or five thousand pounds for what was worth no more than an hundred. The just debt I could easily pay; the other would reduce me to beggary. And I was in justice bound to pay only the hundred pounds, I ask whether the mere alteration of these characters from four or five thousand to one hundred in that obligation, would probably relieve me of any part of my burden? And whether I would not pay the hundred pounds with a thousand times the cheerfulness I could give ten pounds in part payment of the other sum?

2. The changable value of the present money, makes the burden of the war fall exceeding unequal. The man who must pay his tax this year with money he has procured twelve or eighteen months ago, must evidently pay three, four, or five times as much in value to him, as one who has procured his within the two or three months last past, though they both pay an equal nominal sum.—This part of our burden would manifestly be removed if money was brought to the fixed value I have before mentioned.

3. As the standard value of our present money is destroyed by the depreciation, I presume it will be found exceeding difficult to fix any other contrary to what is read in the face of the bill. But new emissions, on the foundation before proposed, would not, and be attended with this additional advantage, that the National debt would not be its only fund, as the present, but also real property. For the elucidation of which, let me suppose I took a bond three years ago for a thousand Spanish milled dollars, which now is paid me in continental; I may tell my debtor, this sum amounts only to a fortieth or fiftieth of what I gave you; and he reply, see the face of the bills. To whom am I to apply for those Spanish milled dollars which the bills were intended to represent, and received for value to that amount? Evidently to no one. In the other, the debtor's real property would be the fund to me, as much as a bank for its notes; for I then would be entitled to apply to him for the real value, which the Spanish milled dollars were made to represent in the contract. Is it not manifest that such alteration of characters would prevent thousands from being loaded with burdens under which many, according to the present course of money, will probably groan, as in the pangs of death?

4. It is incontestible, that a sufficiency of the circulating medium is of the last importance for the support of war. Let us suppose that our present military operations require an annual supply of eight millions, and but four millions in circulation; then, if we consider how unequally this money is always divided, and how much of it is required to carry on the necessary trade, the impossibility of raising the requisite supplies from this money is evident to a demonstration.—It is also evident, that the depreciation of the present money has all along vastly exceeded the quantity; let then ever so much be emitted, at such a rate, the quantity of the medium must inevitably remain vastly deficient. But the fixed value of the other would afford government an opportunity of emitting a sufficiency, and thereby enable the nation to raise the annual supplies by taxes and loans.

If the foregoing reasons be duly and candidly considered, what in the name of common sense can be the cause that Mr. Honestus cannot conceive how such an alteration of characters can relieve us of great part of our burden, which the support of the war necessarily brings upon us?

He proceeds, "but," says the true Patriot, "we shall get rid of an immense load of debt by it:"—He said nominal debt. Why was this important adjective, in that connection, omitted? "This" says he, "Certainly would not be the most honourable way of discharging it."—I say, the most honourable way of discharging a NOMINAL debt; and leave the arguments I have offered for the support of it, in the course of my numbers, to confront his bold, though bare, assertion.*

This gentleman is perfectly at a loss to divine in what this great debt consists: And I am as much, to divine what he means by his ambiguous and sophistical reasoning on this subject. He insinuates, that there is no national debt but what one nation owes to another.—

* I have there proved, that as much as our bills of credit were depreciated, exactly so much of the national debt was thereby paid with the general consent of the nation. Consequently pursuing the plan I had recommended would only be (what common prudence dictates) taking a receipt for being discharged from so much of the National debt, to prevent a demand for what is already paid.

What a perverting the sense of a known term is this! What well-founded buz is made about England's immense national debt! Do such authors only mean their foreign loans? A mere trifle to so wealthy a nation. The import of the term national debt evidently is, any debt which the nation collectively considered is bound to discharge—either to individuals among themselves, or to any foreign nation. What can Mr. Honestus have in view, to attempt this strange experiment? Suppose our foreign debt is and remains a trifle, what would that be to me if I should be reduced to beggary by taxes to appreciate millions in the hands of base speculators?

I cordially join Mr. Honestus in his opinion, that restitution should be made to those who have borne more than their equal proportion, in the support of this war, by reason of the depreciation. But let that gentleman give us a scale of equal taxation, whereby it may be ascertained what sums each of such individuals ought to be reimbursed; and also the proportionate sums of those who ought to make up this reimbursement. Can he possibly believe that the sole view of Congress, in the resolves he cites, was such reimbursement? While he asserts it, he seems to impeach their judgement. Who can believe such a wonderful fatum, that an eighteen years fluctuation of a trading medium will finally prove such a scale of reimbursement?

I consider this elaborate performance of Mr. Honestus rather as an attempt to draw from me farther explanations and proofs of what I have before submitted to the consideration of the candid publick than any confutation of my arguments. I have endeavoured to oblige him in this, without any cause of vindicating my former arguments. And thus, Sir,

I remain, &c.

A TRUE PATRIOT.

March 17, 1780.

Extract of a letter from Elizabeth-Town, dated April 6.

“I have just received intelligence of the sailing of the British fleet out at Sandy-Hook yesterday morning. They consisted of ten ships and seven brigs.—The troops on board are the 42d regiment, one battalion of the guards, the Anspach regiment, Lord Rawdon's brigade and Sincoe's foot, amounting in the whole to about 2000. There is not one horse gone on board. They are convoyed by the Rainbow, the Delight and the Swift brig, and it is said they expect to be met with at sea by the Galatea and Thames frigates, which left New-York last week with the packet. It is reported that Sir H. Clinton's heavy baggage is gone in the fleet.”

TRENTON, APRIL 19.

Yesterday His Excellency the Chevalier De La Luzerne, Minister Plenipotentiary from the Court of Versailles, Mr. MARBOIS, and Mr. MERAILLES, a Spanish Gentleman of distinction, some time past resident in Philadelphia, passed through this place on their way to Head-Quarters at Morris-Town, escorted by a troop of light dragoons.

Extract of a letter from Jersey Camp, near Morris-Town, dated April 13, 1780.

“Yesterday the fleet had not sailed from the Hook; where it is supposed the enemy are waiting for more vessels to take troops on board. All accounts from New-York (which are many) agree that something is the matter, which causes long faces.”

Extract of another letter from the same place, April 15.

“We have not any certainty of the sailing of the last New-York embarkation, nor anything of their designs. Twenty sail of transports are now taking in water at the Watering Place.”

Since the arrival of the rich prize mentioned under the Philadelphia head, two others are sent in the Delaware; one laden with 300 hogsheads of sugar, 400 hogsheads of rum, besides a quantity of cocoa, coffee and cotton; the other also with rum and coffee. We hear that a few days ago the privateer brig Rattlesnake, from Boston, on a cruize, was drove ashore at Squan beach by a British frigate from New-York. As soon as she struck, and the guns were thrown overboard, 33 of the hands determined to make their escape by swimming, but unfortunately three were drowned. In the interim the brig, by the swelling of the tide, and the wind setting on shore, drifted inside the bar, by which means the remainder of the crew, except one, got on shore before the enemy reached the vessel. On taking possession, they plundered and set her on fire.

A Correspondent has sent us the following:

“To The PUBLICK.

“ROUSE, my countrymen, the tories are getting the better at court by their emissaries the lawyers.

They are like to carry on a correspondence with the enemy in spite of law and justice. Their first plan was when captures were made, to harrass the captor by commencing suits in law against him, and cause him to spend the prize in his defence, after condemnation and sale of the captured goods: But practice hath made them more perfect—They now have found a way to take goods captured even after a legal condemnation, and return them to the diabolical party from whom they were taken. Therefore I say again, rouse, my countrymen, and let us remove the causes of such iniquitous proceedings.

A GOOD WHIG.”

FISH-KILL, April 20.

We learn that the enemy last week, sent a party on another excursion to Paramus, where they burnt Mr. G. Hopper's houses and mills, and carried off some people: What further damage they have done we have not been able to learn:—'Tis said the militia as usual, attacked them with great spirit; drove them off, and killed a considerable number.

Mr. Gaine,

OF the little Army of Rebels at Morris Town, None are so impatient under the Abuse of being forcibly detained after the Expiration of the Terms of their Inlistment, as the Sons of St. Patrick, who have been seduced into the Service of the Congress. Lately they had resolved to do themselves Justice, and go off in a Body, and publicly announced that Nothing should prevent it, on the then ensuing Anniversary of the 17th of March. It was a Day of Apprehension to some, who looked for Bloodshed and Murder, but American Policy outwitted Irish good Humour.

Washington on the Day before the Feast gave out an Order for honouring the Saint, and for the Gratification of his Votaries, with a Dispensation from Labour, and the next Morning was ushered in with Music and the hoisting of Colours, exhibiting the 13 Stripes, the favourite Harp, and an Inscription, declaring, in Capitals,

THE INDEPENDENCE OF IRELAND.

To explain the whole, amuse the discontented, and while away the Day, Governor Livingston's Mercuries, purporting that 70,000 Men were in Arms, under the Duke of Leinster, and Lord Shannon, were scattered thro' the Camp. The simple hearted Teagues, charmed with the Sight of the Harp, forgot their Sufferings, and dropped their Complaints, and seemed perfectly happy for the Moment, tho' not a Drop of Whisky or Taffie was to be seen in the Camp, unless in the Tents of the Contrivers of this dry and unusual Way of celebrating, the tutelar Divinity of England's fair and jolly Sister, the Kingdom of Ireland.

This is the Account of the Deserters: And it is in some Measure confirmed, by the following genuine Composition, taken from a Philadelphia Paper of the 30th of March—Surely, no Man will refuse Mr. Washington the Credit due to his Piety, Ingenuity, and Valour. It may however, not be advisable for him in future, ever to be present, without all his Yankey Life-Guards, at an Irish Wedding.

The following General Orders lately issued by our illustrious General the Commander in Chief of the American Army, we hope will be acceptable to all our readers, and in particular to the patriotic and joyous Sons of ST. PATRICK.

Head Quarters, Morris-Town, March 16, 1780.

GENERAL ORDERS.

THE General congratulates the army on the very interesting proceedings of the Parliament of Ireland, and of the inhabitants of that country, which have been lately communicated, not only as they appear calculated to remove those heavy and tyrannical oppressions on their trade, but to restore to a brave and generous people, their ancient rights and freedom, and by their operation, promote the cause of America: Desirous of Impressing on the minds of the army transactions so important in their nature, the General directs, that all fatigue and working parties cease for to-morrow the 17th inst. a day held in particular regard by the people of that nation. At the same time that he orders this as a mark of the pleasure he feels on the occasion, he persuades himself that the celebration of the day will not be attended with the least rioting or disorder.

CHATHAM, April 19.

Last Sunday morning about 7 o'clock, a party of the enemy, consisting of near 200 horse and 300 foot, made a descent upon Paramus where they surprised Major Boyls of the Pennsylvania line, and took several of his command prisoners. Their route was so secret, and retired, that the Major was never apprised of their being out until they were nearly round the house, which, with a Lieutenant and corporal guard, he determined to defend to the last extremity, which he heroically did for a considerable time, and from every account, killed and wounded many of the enemy; but being mortally wounded, his Lieutenant killed, and overpowered by numbers, he was obliged to surrender. The enemy burnt the house, which belonged to one of the Hopper's, who bravely seconded the endeavors of the party to defend it, and was badly wounded in the fray. They also burnt his mill, his brother's house, and one more, the proprietor's name we have not learned. Our people, on their retreat, hung upon their rear, and killed and wounded several of them. Major Boyls is since dead.

On Monday morning arrived at Sandy Hook, a fleet of near fifty sail of vessels from Georgia, under convoy of his Majesty's ships Delaware and Iris, consisting of Cork victuallers, and the following ships from England (all by the way of the West Indies) viz the Trelawney, Moore; the Resolution, Welch; the Hope, Smith; the Peggy, Arnot; and the Smaragda, Byrne.

Upon the night of the 21st inst. a detachment of provincial troops, under the command of Lieut. Col. Laurence, embarked at Sandy Hook upon an expedition against a rebel post at Squan; after being detained a week at the Light-house by contrary winds, having a favourable passage, Col. Laurence landed at midnight and marched immediately for the cantonment of the enemy, which he soon reached, but was much mortified in finding the post had been withdrawn the morning of the 20th, a Lieutenant, serjeant and four or five private men excepted, who were made prisoners; nothing further remaining to be done, the detachment reembarked and returned to Sandy Hook the 22d inst.

IN all countries where war has been carried on by a subordinate state against the supreme and superintending power in a contest for liberty, the evils and misfortunes which such inferior states have suffered before they attained their point, have been innumerable and almost inexpressibly great. In the long war between the seven United Provinces and Spain, the Dutch were often worsted in battle, and the Prince of Orange obliged to leave the country; which was overrun by an army inured to plunder, and the most cruel and inhuman devastations. The Prince, however, collected his broken troops, recruited them, and, after repeated attempts, at length forced his way again into the provinces, which had been ravaged by the enemy; the cities were plundered, the fields laid waste, and the inhabitants murdered and destroyed by that inhuman monster the Duke of Alva, who boasted that he had put 18,000 persons to death during his administration.

The Swiss Cantons also obtained their liberty by their courage and conduct in the wars they had with the House of Austria, with whom they fought sixty battles. When I consider these facts, and compare the happy situation of America with the miserable state of those countries in their contentions for liberty, I am sincerely grateful to the all wise disposer of human events for the manifold instances of his protection extended to us.

In the course of the present just and necessary war, the situation of our affairs forced us upon many expedients, in order to our defence, one of which was, as we had no treasure in silver or gold, to strike paper money to defray the expences of the military arrangements.

At that time it would have been imprudent and impolitick to have taxed in order to raise funds for this purpose. I look upon it that it was a master-stroke of policy not to have attempted it; for as the sources of trade were almost dried up, and our commerce greatly interrupted at sea by the enemy's cruizers, the money which lay in the pockets of the people was thought necessary to their affairs; and as the event of the experiment we were about to try was then very uncertain, it was thought best rather to carry on the war by emissions of paper than by taxes.

The recommendation of Congress to the several states to make this money legal tender, was just and proper at the time of passing it, because the continental money was at par with silver and gold; but the moment it began to depreciate the resolve should have been qualified so far that it should not have affected the honor and mutual faith of parties, pledged to each other in their private contracts, to which the old laws were guarantees: It should have said that every contract of a private nature made heretofore, at, and after this time, shall stand on its own nature and principles, and the performance be enforced accordingly. For there is nothing more dangerous to a state than to sanctify by formal acts the breach of the faith of private agreements and contracts. Besides the injustice and cruelty attending such practices, it has a most pernicious effect in destroying the principles and morals of the people, the maintenance of which is the chief design and end of all good government; by degrees rooting out every just principle from the minds of men, and of course all liberal and noble thoughts; it aims a deadly blow at liberty itself.

Even those laws, deriving their force from the law of nature, ought ever to cease to be as soon as they cease to be necessary; and it is as contrary to the law of nature to enforce laws when the reasons of making them cease, as it is to enact laws for which there is no cause at all, or an ill cause. And to do this, as an eminent writer says, "would be to subject reason to force, and to apply a penalty where there is no crime."

From this principal then I assert that the tender law ought to be repealed, instantly repealed, that justice may be enforced by the laws, and that wicked and designing men may be prevented in future from drawing advantage to themselves from so iniquitous and unjust a power with which this law invests them.

Before the war, when money was lent on bond or mortgage, it had some kind of standard value when compared with the value of lands, and the necessaries of life; and the honor of the obligor or mortgagor was tacitly pledged to make this value good: For, "the essence of right and wrong does not depend upon the words and clauses inserted in a code or statute-book, much less upon the conclusions and explications of lawyers and statesmen, but upon reason and the nature of things."

The tender law, so inadequate to the purpose of keeping up the credit of the money, so full of injustice and destruction of moral honesty, is nevertheless continued in force, to the terror of many well affected families whose sole dependence, nay existence, is upon the mercy of the debtor. And what is still more insupportable, there are yet many creditors, who if paid in the present money, will be ruined; or, if not paid, will become bankrupts, from an incapacity to fulfil their contracts and discharge their debts. What is this but putting, as it were, a two edged sword in the hands of the debtor against the naked and defenceless creditor. In truth the tender law is, at this time the most iniquitous of all laws. I am informed by a gentleman of the bar it amounts to an annihilation of all debts under an hundred pounds, where the debtor refuses payment; for the fees and charges and expences of attendance at court, arising in the course of a suit at law for such sum, (no inconsiderable one, if an old debt) actually swallow up the greater part of it: So that the dreadful havock made of fortune, acquired in a course of honest industry, by the wicked and unjust part of the community is truly deplorable, and demands a speedy and effectual remedy from the legislatures of the several states.

I have heard I confess with horror the language of some interested men, in opposition to the repeal of this law. They alledge that the mischief is nearly at an end, and for this reason 'tis unnecessary.—This mode of reasoning may suit some sort of people, but does not comport with the character of honesty or feeling, which if those persons have not, they ought for the honour of humanity to affect.—If there is one man in this state (and there are thousands) who is so unhappy as to be in this dreadful predicament, he has a right to effectual justice in his case.

I have heard of another reason against the repeal of the tender law in a neighbouring state, which if there be any foundation for it, is an indelible blot upon the reputations of some of the members of that legislature: It is, that they will not repeal the act because they have not yet discharged their private debts. I wish and hope this may be ill founded, and that it may be fully shewn by their conduct at the next sitting. This law has been long since repealed in the minds of all honest men, who will not, who cannot, take advantage of it, and lies open to rogues and knaves only; which is giving a license to the worst men in the community to destroy the best.

I will now bestow a few words on the new plan of finance lately adopted by Congress.

Two hundred millions of dollars at one for forty falls to the inconsiderable sum of five millions of dollars; I call it inconsiderable, because it is of no consequence when regarded as a national debt upon the thirteen states.

After the taxes for the next twelve-month have been collected, little or none of the present money will remain in circulation, and the new money to be issued upon the credit of the respective states must of necessity preserve its value; because considerable sums will be annually sunk by taxes, which will ever keep down the quantity.

At this time, when the continental money is sixty for one, Congress resolve to receive it in taxes at forty for one, which is giving an advantage of one-third or half a crown in each dollar. And by a table just framed by Congress, it appears that the strictest general justice is done the holders of certificates for loans of money to the public, nay, an advantage is given them which few private men would allow.

I shall only mention here one instance of the truth of what I have said; which is, that it appears from this table that money lent to the public in January last, when the exchange with respect to gold and silver was fifty for one; is valued at $35 \frac{80}{100}$ continental for one, hard money, which yields a profit to the lender (not reckoning the fraction) of eight shillings and six-pence in the pound, or forty-two pounds ten shillings in the value of every hundred pounds hard money placed in the funds at that period; so that the monied man who invested five thousand pounds continental money in gold and silver, could purchase no more with it than one hundred, whilst he who lent it to the public will have the same sum of five thousand pounds continental estimated at one hundred and forty-two pounds ten shillings hard money, and no doubt receive the usual interest for it.

It's true Congress have promised the lenders of money to make the sum good in the terms of the bills; and had a peace taken place about that time, I do not entertain a doubt it would have been done: But the continuance of the war, the arts of the disaffected and interested, added to the inexperience and incapacity of public bodies, and particularly the wretched arrangements of the staff of the army, many of the subordinate parts of which have been filled with the needy, and persons reduced in their fortunes, who have been employed to purchase the public supplies upon commission; those have been the efficient causes of the depreciation of the money below what the quantity in circulation would naturally have produced. And I have heard some unthinking persons lay the whole blame upon Congress, but tho' no doubt a part of it ought to fall to their share, yet the other causes I have mentioned have been strongly combined with those that have taken their rise from that body.

Let any man of sober reason and candour only take a comparative view of the morals and conduct of the people at this time, and at the commencement of the war—Not only a steady and firm attachment to the glorious cause of freedom, but the most generous and heroick resolution to risque all, prevailed generally throughout the states—Property, and even life itself, were nothing, when opposed to the value of the blessings we were contending for.—But alas! the case is now greatly altered. The allurements of pleasure, and the universal rage for money, have almost bereaved us of our senses; and nothing but the appearance of the enemy on our borders will quench these passions, and call forth that patriot spirit for which the people of this country have been so remarkably distinguished. It has been a most salutary remedy for evils of this nature in most of the commonwealths of the ancient and modern world, when torn by civil dissensions, emasculated by luxury and ease, and running into a general corruption of manners. Liberty is a most invaluable blessing, without which property is of little estimation—for “what right,” as a great man asks, “can we have in that which another may take from “us at will, and without our consent?”—It is possible we may again, before the conclusion of the war, be put to the proof: It is therefore the interest of every man on this extensive continent within the United States, and who wishes well to his country, to join in every public measure calculated for its safety, as is this plan of Congress.

It may be alledged that these sentiments have taken rise from interested motives; I never delivered a public sentiment with a view to my private emolument, and it is certain I have had my full share of the hopes and misfortunes incident to the times.

CREON.

TRENTON, APRIL 27.

Extract of a letter from a Gentleman at Philadelphia, to his friend in this town, April 19, 1780.

“Exchange lowers here;—money appreciates;—goods fall. I have the fullest conviction that the resolutions of Congress on the 18th of March ult.¹ are right. They will do more good than all that has been attempted hitherto. I am sure if the legislatures do but apprehend them rightly, they will come into the plan. Everything upon the subject will meet with opposers, and I do not say this is unobjectionable; but I must beg leave to go so far as to observe I have seen nothing yet which is less liable to exception. It will be greatly beneficial if we give it fair play. It is said to be favourable to the landholders, and unfavourable to the monied interest. For my part I see very little footing for this distinction in America; if there is any, the latter is so very inconsiderable when compared with the former, that I am very positive the former ought, while we deal in generals, to be looked upon as the community. Money also is so very equally distributed, that I believe the landed men have as much as the traders.”

Since our last the Maryland Line, under the command of Brigadier-General GIST,² marched through this town, on their way to the Southward. The troops made a very martial appearance.

LETTER I.

WE are now engaged in a cruel war; several years have passed since we have been lead, time after time, to view the awful scene of towns burning, numbers slaughtered in battle, neighbours and friends starving and dying in prisons, with other hardships too many to recount. Is it not proper to consider what all this is for? Why have we engaged in such a scene? Why do we continue still to struggle with so many difficulties? This we ought to consider and keep in mind, that it is for LIBERTY; the glorious cause of Liberty, that we may be a free people; that we may enjoy the natural rights of mankind; that we may not be reduced to a state of mean and abject slavery. When we suffer so much to secure liberty, will any say that the means of obtaining it are a greater evil than the thing obtained will be a good? No, by no means. If we properly view the importance of Liberty, we shall not think that we risk too much for it; we will still go on; nothing is too much to sacrifice for it; be our motto still, what it was at first, Liberty or Death. What a privilege is freedom! Liberty is given us by God. Such a gift of our maker is not to be undervalued. The Congress well observe, in the declaration of independency, it is by the Creator given to all men, and is one of the unalterable rights of human nature. The difference between a man and a beast is this world, is, that the human creature possesses reason and liberty, the brute not. The difference between people that are free, and those that are not, is like the difference between those that are shut up in prison and those that are out, and can go where they please. The importance of Liberty will appear, if we consider the ancient Greeks and Romans; the noble spirit, learning, and philosophy, that shone out amongst them; and compare their condition with that of the Turks, Negroes, or some other abject, barbarous nations. Liberty is such a blessing, such an amiable object, that there is a natural thirst and desire for it in all the human race. This cannot be eradicated, but is as fixed and inseparable from nature as self-love is. To take away freedom, is justly esteemed a violence done to nature; it is so thought by all that are deprived of this glorious natural gift. Justly have we endeavoured to secure it by our present struggle: Well may we go on to contend for it, though it should be at the expence of more blood and treasure. None of the human race care to be deprived of Liberty, and yet almost all mankind have, and always have had, a strong and strange disposition to deprive others of it. It is strange what an invariable propensity there is in fallen man to deprive others of this natural depositum. I have ever thought it strange that mankind should be so ready as they are to kill one another; and equally strange, that they should have the same, or a greater disposition to deprive of liberty while living. Numerous as wars and slaughters are, there is a much greater disposition to take away liberty than life. Would particular persons, large bodies of people, and even nations, permit others to deprive them of Liberty, as the usurpers pleased, there would be few or no wars in the world. Most, if not all, the wars that have been since Adam's time, have been by some assuming tyrannical persons, attempting to take the freedom of others. Near four thousand years ago, Chedorlaomer assumed the rights or liberties of five other kings, and their people. Gen. 14. While they submitted we hear of no war; but what follows, v. 4, 5. Twelve years they served Chedorlaomer, and in the thirteenth year they rebelled; and in the fourteenth year came Chedorlaomer, and smote, &c. The tyrannical Pharaoh enslaved the Israelites; and while they serve him, there is peace; but when Israel claim their natural rights, the tyrant raises war against them, though to his own destruction. The ancient book of Judges, furnishes us with several instances of wars commenced and pursued because people would not continue in bondage. And we learn from the Greek and Roman histories, that the wars were chiefly occasioned by one nation or kingdom refusing to yield their natur[a]l rights to those that were pleased to require them. Why have the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus been persecuted, and such rivers of Christian blood been shed? It was because they claimed liberty of conscience; liberty to think and choose religion for themselves; and would not, could not submit to the impositions of spiritual tyranny. How wonderful is it, that when one man claims that which he has as good a right to, as another has to breathe, that the other will, with violence, rise up and kill him, unless the first will part with his natural right! It shews the awful depravity of human nature. And what has been said, and even the whole history of mankind shews, that in all ages of the world, people in general have preferred wars, and even death, to a state of bondage or slavery. And it may serve to vindicate our conduct in the present war; while we are fighting for liberty we are but doing what all nations have done.—The disposition to deprive others of liberty is very general, but it is not universal; there are some exceptions in the human race. There are some in whom the god-like principle of love and benevolence prevails; there are some who delight in doing good. Where this principle prevails, there is a desire that others should be as happy, and partake of the same privileges that we ourselves do. This divine principle has appeared not only in particular persons, but in some governments. It has appeared in some who have civil power, and are in high stations. How eminent and remarkable is this in our illustrious ally! Who, in a most disinterested manner, has generously done, and is doing, so much to free us from the tyranny we were threatened with. Where shall we find an equal instance in the history of mankind. By such an example we may well be stimulated to contend for our freedom. We shall cheerfully proceed, when we have so good a cause; when we have the example of such multitudes who, in all ages, have, to their death contended for freedom; when we have such an ally to assist us; when we have such a fair prospect of success; especially when we have such a good and righteous God to look to; a God who governs the world and disposes of nations. We will go on to complete that freedom which we have begun to contend for.

“Yesterday morning a fleet of forty-seven sail, under convoy, arrived at Sandy-Hook from Savannah; they consist of merchant vessels from England, that lately arrived at Georgia, via the West Indies, Cork victuallers, &c. They left Charlestown bar the 8th instant, on which day Vice Admiral Arbuthnot, in his Majesty’s ship Roebuck, with the Renown, Romulus, seven frigates, and a number of gallies, passed the rebel batteries on Sullivan’s-Island, and sailed into Charlestown harbour. The Richmond frigate led the van, and as they were favoured with a fresh breeze of fair wind, sustained very little, if any, damage by the fire from the rebel batteries. His Excellency General Sir Henry Clinton with the royal army, was advanced to within less than 300 yards of the rebel lines on Charlestown neck, and had strongly fortified all his posts, so that the place was completely invested by land and water, and the rebel garrison precluded from all possibility of escaping. On the night of the 7th inst. the rebels kept up an incessant fire from their lines, but after the shipping got up it partly ceased, and it was not doubted that as soon as the army and navy commenced a joint attack upon the town, the garrison must surrender at discretion, or be buried in its ruins. Health and plenty prevailed throughout the British and Hessian encampments, also in the fleet, and every department vied with each other in alacrity to promote his Majesty’s service. The second day after the fleet left Charlestown bar, they fell in with the fleet which sailed from Sandy-Hook the 7th inst. under convoy, with a large body of troops on board, to augment the grand army in South-Carolina. They were then in lat. 36, all well, steering for Charlestown, with a fair wind."

CHATHAM, April 19.

Last Sunday morning about 7 o'clock, a party of the enemy, consisting of near 200 horse, and 300 foot, made a descent upon Paramus, where they surprized Major

¹ Absalom Baird, of Pennsylvania, was commissioned, March 20th, 1780, Surgeon of Colonel Jonathan Baldwin's (of Mass.) Artillery Artificer Regiment; he retired March 29th, 1781, and died October 27th, 1805.

² Thaddeus Keeler was Sergeant 2d Connecticut, July 13th to December 23d, 1775, and after various promotions was commissioned, May 8th, 1780, Regimental Quartermaster; he retired January 1st, 1783.

Biles of the Pennsylvania line, and took several of his command prisoners. Their rout was so secret, and retired, that the Major was never apprized of their being out until they were nearly round the house, which, with a Lieutenant and Corporal's guard, he determined to defend to the last extremity, which he heroically did for a considerable time, and from every account, killed and wounded many of the enemy; but being mortally wounded, his Lieutenant killed, and overpowered by numbers, he was obliged to surrender. The enemy burnt the house, which belonged to one of the Hopper's, who bravely seconded the endeavours of the party to defend it, and was badly wounded in the fray. They also burnt his mill, his brothers house, and one more, the proprietor's name we have not learned. The enemy, as usual, plundered both whig and tory of all the stock they came across. Our people on their retreat hung upon their rear, and killed and wounded several of them.

Another embarkation, we hear, is soon to take place at New-York.—The rumour of the fleet that sailed last week having returned is premature.

TRENTON, MAY 3.

We are obliged to the gentleman who sent us the following:

“Captain Marriner left Amboy on Tuesday evening the 18th ult. in a whale-boat with nine men, and on Thursday morning about 4 o'clock he boarded the Blacksnake with 20 hands, which he carried without opposition, although he was within hail of the Volcano at Sandy-Hook. The Blacksnake was a privateer, and belonged to Rhode-Island, but had been taken by the Galatea. Capt. Marriner then weighed his anchor and stood to sea. After 5 the same morning he fell in with the schooner Morning Star, that mounted 4 swivels, 2 cohorns, and had 33 hands.—Notwithstanding his having the brig, with 20 hands on board in charge, he immediately boarded the schooner, and after an obstinate action, carried her. The enemy had 3 men killed and 5 wounded. The prizes are safely arrived at Egg-Harbour, and 52 prisoners taken in them, are conducted to Philadelphia. The schooner was commanded by Robert Campbell, of New-York, who fell amongst the killed,—the men taken in her were mostly deserters from men of war, secretly conveyed from New-York, to go on board a privateer commanded by Capt. Hall, who was hourly expected from that city.”

We hear that a large number of counterfeit continental dollars was found on board one of the above prizes.

At a Special Court held in the county of Sussex, the week before last, John Harp was found guilty of manslaughter, and burnt in the hand. James Mac Quigg, James Slack and Matthew Brown, were all found guilty of a misdemeanor, in attempting to pilot sundy deserters from the Convention troops¹ to New-York.—M’Quigg was sentenced to 12 months imprisonment; Slack to pay a fine of £1000 pounds and nine months imprisonment; and Brown nine months imprisonment.

About the 17th ult. a party of Indians were discovered at Minisink, in Pennsylvania, and on Thursday following some of the Jersey militia passed the Delaware and engaged them; a very severe conflict ensued, which ended in a total defeat of the Indians. They left their commanding officer dead on the field, and by the orderly book and papers found on him, he appears to be one Daily (a whiteman) formerly of Somerset county. We had Captain Westbrook, a Lieutenant, and one private killed, in the engagement;—the Indians left behind them six blankets, two watch-coats, several packs, and a quantity of provisions.

Friday last died at Morristown, DON JUAN DE MERAILLES, the Spanish gentleman of distinction who passed thro’ this place on the 18th ult. with the Minister of France. His corse, we hear, is to be removed to Philadelphia, where it is to be interred with those marks of respect which are due to gentlemen of his dignified rank and fortune.¹

On Sunday the 16th ult. died, at the camp near Morristown, after a long and painful illness, DANIEL PIATT, Esquire, Major of the first Jersey regiment; in which he had served from the first raising of the same. He was a gentleman of sound understanding, great personal bravery, with a strong desire of excelling in his profession, which, joined to an handsome soldierly exterior, rendered him at once the good and graceful officer. His death is justly lamented as a very heavy loss to the regiment.

The 24th ult. a fleet of about 40 sail arrived at the Hook, supposed from the southward; and on Tuesday went up to New-York.

We hear that the ship Hetty, Capt. Brice, the brig General Reed, Capt. Davidson, and the brig Argo, Capt. —, belonging to Philadelphia, were taken a few days ago by some of the enemy's cruizers, and carried to New-York.

On Monday night the 24th ult. as a party of our militia was patrolling the roads at Shrewsbury they were attacked by several persons, supposed to be tories or refugees from the Hook, and two of the militia killed. One of them is said to be a Mr. West, late of Crosswicks.

Sunday evening last an express arrived at Philadelphia from Charlestown, who left that metropolis the 12th ult. and brings advice, that nine of the enemy's vessels had got over the bar, and were within two miles of the town, but that no attack had then been made: That the Virginia line had actually arrived: That the militia were flocking in from the country: That all the troops were in high spirits, fully determined to defend the town; and that they were well supplied with ammunition, provisions, and other necessaries, to enable them to maintain their ground.

NEW YORK, MAY 3.

It is reported from Jersey, that the minute guns heard last Friday afternoon in the direction of Morris Town, were in honour of Monsieur Luzerne, the person who succeeded Gerard, and passing under the appellation of the French Ambassador, and that he died suddenly at the Rebel Camp in the mountains by the hand of violence;¹ others say that the explosions were at the interment of another Adventurer, called the Spanish Ambassador. What seems to be certain is this ——— That Luzerne had rendered himself obnoxious to the Cits of Philadelphia, by an incautious dose of French politics, in advice to the Congress on the means of thickening the lean ranks of the rebel army, "Press your People hard with Taxes, the more Beggars, the more Soldiers." That the populace threatened to lay hands upon him, and that it was thought adviseable for son Excellence to quit the town, till the Congress could find means to pacify the unruly multitude; that on this he repaired to the army for protection, and was lately escorted by Mr. Washington on a secret visit to Elizabeth Town, for a Peep at Staten-Island; it is added that there has been a great waste of white and black powder at Morris Town, towards recovering the credit of the Ambassador—Fifty females, 'tis said, were picked up for a dance, and 'tis supposed his departure will scarce leave a jill of Taffia in the whole camp of the pious friends of St. Patrick, whose general orders of the 16th of March last, will certainly never be forgotten by the true friends of Ireland.

—The Royal Gazette, No. 375, May 3, 1780.

¹ The Chevallier Anne-César Luzerne was born at Paris, in 1741, was aid-de-camp of the Duke de Broglie, his relation: made several campaigns with him and became, in 1762, Major-General of Cavalry, and then Colonel of Grenadiers. Abandoning the military career, he was sent, in 1776, on a mission to the Court of Bavaria, and in 1779 as minister to the United States. In 1780 he arranged a loan to help the American troops. He was held in high estimation. Luzerne county, Pennsylvania, is named after him. In 1788 he was appointed ambassador at London, and died there in 1791.—The French in America, by Thomas Balch. NEW-YORK, May 15.

The Privateers that took the Ship Jenny from London, for this Port, off Sandy-Hook last Sunday Week, were two Sloops, (Bermuda built) of 12 Guns each, and a Schooner of 10 Guns, from New-London. A few Days before, at Blue Point, they took a Sloop belonging to Mr. Peamark, loaded with Lumber, on board of which Vessel they put fifteen Hands, and 6 Guns, but she was afterwards retaken by a Boat with four Hands and only four small Swivels, commanded by William Barrak.

The Trumbull, of 24 nine Pounders, and the General Miffin, of 20 Guns, have lately failed from New-London, in order to cruize off Sandy-Hook; and Captain Young, in a Ship of 16 Guns, is to sail from Philadelphia about this Time, for the same Purpose.

LETTER II.
ON LIBERTY.

WE are now engaged in an important struggle for liberty; we hope the time is near when we shall completely obtain what we have been so long contending for. Yes, my fellow countrymen, I think the time is not far off. As it has cost us so much to obtain our liberty, we should take care not to lose it afterward. It may be lost; liberty has been lost; whole states or kingdoms may lose it. As it may be lost in part, or in whole, we should guard against the partial loss of it, for this tends to its total loss in time. We in America shall be in danger. The disposition which has so generally prevailed in the world (I mean a disposition to deprive fellow-creatures of liberty) will not cease to exist and operate in America. There will be a spirit of usurpation that will always watch for opportunities; and if the greater part of the Americans do not watch, they will lose their liberty. It may be worth our pains to enquire how, by what means, and in what way, people that once enjoyed it come to lose their liberty. The answer is, that vice is the general, radical cause of this loss; but that there are several instrumental causes. Vice has a double tendency to deprive of liberty. First, As it provokes God to withhold his protection, and punish a sinning people by permitting usurpers and tyrants to seize on their natural rights, and reduce them to a state of bondage. Read it in the book of Judges. The children of Israel did evil in the sight of the Lord, and he sold them into the hand of Jabin, &c. Read it also in the histories of other vicious nations. Secondly, Vice has a natural tendency to the loss of freedom. Idleness and prodigality will reduce men, and make them dependent upon those that are rich, which will endanger freedom. Vice enfeebles the mind, unmans human creatures, and many ways puts them into the power of those who watch for an opportunity to subjugate them. Freedom is lost, either by open force and conquest, or by corruption, bribery destroying the freedom of elections, and inducing people to part with their liberty by degrees. Popular governments, who choose their own legislators and officers, are in danger of losing freedom by corruption and undue influence in elections. Here is the danger of America. If elections are not kept free and unbiassed, the government will soon become tyrannical. The very rich and the very poor, will both conspire to destroy freedom of elections; the rich by aspiring, and the poor by being dependent upon them. When persons are so poor as to become dependent, their freedom of voting at elections is gone. The way therefore to secure our freedom, will be to practise virtue, and maintain the independence of individuals. Where these two are maintained, where virtue prevails, and individuals are independent, freedom will never be lost. In order to maintain the freedom of elections, there should, as much as possible, be an equality among the people of the land. If there could be something like an equality of estate and property, it would tend much to preserve civil liberty; but this cannot be expected; yet there ought, by all means, be an equality of privilege and independence in elections. One should consider himself as good a man as another, and not be brow beaten or intimidated by riches or supposed superiority. There are two many in the world who, by reason of their wealth, or education, or titles, think themselves so much above the common sort of people, that they will scarcely eat with them at the same table, or ride with, or converse with them with any freedom; but would have the common people keep at a profound distance. Such men, so superior in their own conceit, would, if they had favourable opportunity, bring others into subjection and slavery. But equality should be encouraged. Among freemen of the same country it should be something as it is among merchants; if one by some special frown of Providence fails, and is much reduced, the others will not dispise him or shut him out of their company, but rather help him, and allow him all the common privileges of the same body; those may not be worth the hundredth part so much as one of them; but still treat him as an equal. So should it be among all the freemen of a state, where all the essential privileges of a state arise from and depend primarily upon free elections. To what purpose is the choice of our own legislators and officers, civil and military, if elections are not free. We have a striking instance in the case of Great-Britain: They choose the House of Commons, and the King and his ministers can do nothing of importance without the Commons, because they have the disposal of the money: But to what purpose are the elections in Britain, the choice is not by persons free and independent, and the consequences is such as might be expected. And elections among us will not, cannot be free, if the electors bring themselves into a condition to be influenced by the great. If we in America design to maintain the independence of these United States, the common people must maintain their independence, and the freedom of elections. So far as freedom of elections fails, so far the independence of our States fails, tho' it may not be felt immediately. People should be excited and encouraged to maintain their freedom in elections. It is not enough that there be good laws in this case, they should be good customs; it should be thought mean and contemptible for a man to be biassed or influenced at elections. A man that is worth but fifty pounds, should in such a case be as bold, and self-sufficient, as one that is worth five thousand. There will be no danger of losing our privileges, if we can keep a proper equality and independence among the inhabitants. But 'probably I may, upon some other occasion, say something more upon the importance of a proper equality among the people of America. At present I observe, that we are infinitely indebted to divine Providence for all the privileges which we enjoy; and especially for that state of freedom that we are, or hope soon, to be in the fullest possession of. By divine Providence our ancestors were led into this land as an asylum; by the same benign power, their posterity have been preserved and increased to what they are now; by the same gracious God we have hitherto been helped in the present war, for to him we have appealed in the present contest. It would be wicked, it would be very ungrateful, it would be shameful, for us to forget, or give up our privileges. What less can we do in return for the divine benignity, than to maintain the practice of virtue, use all proper means to preserve our freedom, and cast an eye of pity on the negro slaves among us, who are groaning under a bondage which we think worse than death.

Extract of a letter from Morris-Town.

“From New-York we learn, that the Galatea, Iris and Delight frigates, had put into that harbour, said to be driven in by Paul Jones, who was reported to be off the coast with two ships of 44 guns, several frigates, and a number of small vessels. A field day of the refugees (who had lately associated in New-York) was ordered, and as many men as were wanted of them, were impressed to man the British frigates, and the Russel of 74 guns, which was soon done with a few negroes to help out.”

TRENTON, MAY 17.

We hear that a large ship from London for New-York was captured off the Hook, on Sunday sennight, after an obstinate action of four hours, by two New-England privateers, and carried into an Eastern port, laden with dry goods, said to be valued at £.60,000 sterling. During the engagement several frigates were dispatched from the Hook to reconnoitre the vessels, but after they had got some distance, were, by a signal from the British ship of 74 guns, ordered to return, lest the firing should prove a decoy of a French fleet, which they daily expect on the coast, and in consequence thereof have ordered a number of vessels to be got ready to sink in the channel at a short notice.

By accounts from New-York we learn, that nothing material had happened at Charlestown before the first instant.

On Saturday last 35 sail of square-rigged vessels came up to Decker's ferry, opposite Bergen Point. Their design is not certainly known.

CHATHAM, MAY 17.

A correspondent has favoured us with the following particular account of the late affair at Paramus. Inserted by particular desire.

On the 16th ult. a detachment of two hundred continental troops, under the command of Major Byles, of the Pennsylvania line, stationed at Paramus, was suddenly attacked by a party of the enemy, consisting of about two hundred horse and four hundred foot. The attack commenced a little after sun-rise. Major Byles, besides his usual patrols, had that morning sent out two parties, each with a commissioned officer; but such is the situation of that part of the country, intersected with roads, and inhabited chiefly by disaffected people, that all precautions failed. His parties and patrols were eluded, and the sentinels near his quarters were the first that gave notice of the enemies approach. He had just before paraded and dismissed his men. The advance of the horse was so rapid, that no time was left to reassemble them. The Major had no resource but the defence of the house he was in; this therefore, with only a small quarter guard, he resolved to attempt, though from the smallness of his force, and its entire disproportion to the place he was defending, he could have no prospect of success; but chose rather to fall in a brave; though hopeless resistance, than to save himself by a dishonourable surrender. He immediately made the best disposition the hurry of the moment would permit, and animated his men by his exhortation and example. A brisk fire ensued on both sides. The house was soon surrounded on every part, and no effort of the little party seemed capable of hindering the enemy from forcing their way. Some of the men, intimidated by so threatening a scene, began to cry for quarters; others, obeying the commands of their officers, continued to fire from the windows. The enemy without upbraided them with the perfidy of asking quarters and persisting in resistance; desiring them to come out and they would quarter them. Major Byles exclaiming, in a determined tone, denied his having called for quarters; but his resolution could not avail, a surrender took place; and, in the act, the Major received a mortal wound in the left breast, with which, in two days after, he expired a victim to his gallantry and refined sense of duty. So distinguished and enviable a fall must endear his memory to his fellow soldiers and fellow citizens.

Lieutenants Glenworth and Sherman had thrown themselves in the Major's quarters, and assisted in the defence. They displayed great activity and bravery. The latter was wounded. Such part of the detachment as could be collected together, aided by a few spirited militia, hung close upon the rear of the enemy during their retreat, and harassed them with a continual fire, retaking four wag-gons with plunder and nineteen horses.

Lieutenant Bryson being a few days before detached by Major Byles with a small party to the New Bridge, defended that post for some time with great gallantry and coolness, he sustaining in person, with his espontoon, the attack of four horsemen, and received several wounds; but being overpowered with numbers, surrendered to one of their officers. It is said he received marks of politeness from them, on account of the great bravery and deliberate courage displayed by him during the skirmish.

The enemy, agreeable to their usual mode of procedure, plundered and burnt the house and mill of Mr. John Hopper, and that of his brother's. In the former the family of Mr. Abraham Brasher lived, who, with the rest, were left almost destitute of a second change of clothes. The commanding officer being requested by Mrs. Brasher on her knees to spare the house, he damn'd her, and bid her begone, declaring they all deserved to be bayoneted. They made their boast, that as Major Byles did not present the hilt of his sword in front, when surrendering, they shot him. Thus died this brave and gallant officer a victim to their savage cruelty.

The loss on our side killed, wounded, and taken, was one Major, two Captains, four Lieutenant, and about forty rank and file. That of the enemy, by their own acknowledgment, near as many.

We are informed that at New-Town, Sussex county, on the 6th instant, John M'Coy and Robert Maxwell, deserters from the convention troops, were convicted of burglary, committed in Greenheage; that the Friday ensuing M'Coy was executed, and the other respited till the 9th of June next. We are told they appeared extremely penitent, expressed confident hopes of salvation, and, at the place of execution, made the most solemn protestations of their innocence of the accusation for which they were to suffer. The unhappy man died in charity, he said, with all men, and hoped that after his death the world might have due testimony of his integrity. As during their imprisonment they were often visited by the Rev. Mr. Ogden, who gained their confidence and esteem; as they were convinced that a confession of guilt might be even to their temporal advantage, and would not operate against any clemency they might expect, and that silence would be construed to be obstinacy; and as in a discourse Mr. Ogden¹ delivered on the occasion, in his address to them among other things, he, in the most affecting manner, shewed the awful consequence of departing this life in a state of impenitence, or with guilt in their lips; great numbers of the spectators were inclined to entertain very favourable sentiments of their innocence, and especially as some circumstances have transpired which render it highly probable the robbery was perpetrated by a party from Staten Island. Many persons ardently wished the lives of both the culprits could have been preserved, for the present.—It is mentioned that the evidences against them were so positive as to the identity of their persons, that the jury immediately brought them in guilty of the charge laid in their indictment. The gentleman who favours us with this information, and who was present at the trial of these men, and at the execution of M'Coy, says, he is now fully convinced of their innocence. He adds, that Judge Simmes¹ did himself great honour in the discharge of his office, and sincerely lamented it was not in his power to appoint council for the prisoners, there being no practitioner of law in court except the representative of the attorney general.

On Monday the 4th instant was celebrated at Philadelphia the funeral of the Spanish Resident who lately died at Morris Town. The following was the order of the procession.

The Bier covered with Black Cloth,
Mons. Lucerne, the French Resident,
The Congress,
The General Officers,
The Citizens.

When the procession arrived at the Roman Catholic Chapel the Priest presented the Holy Water to Mons. Lucerne, who, after sprinkling himself, presented it to Mr. Huntington, President of the Congress: The Calvinist paused a considerable time, near a minute, but at length his affection for the great and good ally conquered all scruples of conscience, and he too besprinkled and sanctified himself with all the adroitness of a veteran Catholic; which his brethren of the Congress perceiving, they all without hesitation followed the righteous example of their proselyted President. Before the company, which were extremely numerous, left the chapel, curiosity induced some persons to uncover the Bier, when they were highly enraged at finding the whole a sham, there being no corps under the cloth, the body of the Spanish gentleman having been several days before interred at Morris Town. The Bier was surrounded with wax candles, and every member of this egregious Congress, now reconciled to the Popish Communion, carried a taper in his hand.

A SHORT INTRODUCTION TO
 E n g l i s h G r a m m a r .

By ROBERT LOWTH, Lord Bishop of London.

TO those who are acquainted with the merit of this performance, or the same of its author, a publisher's recommendation is needless. Those who have not seen it, may be told, that it was lately published in England, and was known in America but little before the war. A large impression of it was sold in Philadelphia in 1775; it was received with great approbation in several of our colleges, and began to be introduced into the common schools. This is the only system of grammar in which the English language is suffered to wear it's own appearance, and is freed from the borrowed forms of other languages which it knows nothing of.

We begin to be sensible in this country of the importance of grammatical knowledge; it begins to make part of school education; and we may please ourselves with the prospect, that it will be more universal when we see how easily it is obtained.

For some time past they have had parties out cutting fascines, stealing fencerrails, and other materials, for the use of their fortifications.

A large ship mounting 16 six-pounders, and 72 hands, bound from Barbadoes to New-York, was captured a few days ago by the brig Holker, and sent into the Delaware. TRENTON, May 17.

We hear that a large ship from London for New-York was captured off the Hook, on Sunday sennight, after an obstinate action of four hours, by two New-England privateers, and carried into an Eastern port, laden with dry goods, said to be valued at 60,000 l. sterling. During the engagement several frigates were dispatched from the Hook to reconnoitre the vessels, but after they had got some distance, were, by a signal from a British ship of 74 guns ordered to return, lest the firing should prove a decoy of a French fleet, which they daily expect on the coast, and in consequence thereof have ordered a number of vessels to be got ready to sink in the channel at a short notice.

A detachment of 150 men from the 57th regiment under the command of Major Brownlow,¹ landed upon New Ark Meadows, yesterday morning at two o'clock, in order to surprize a small body of Rebels quartered in the town; upon the march of the troops to that place, Major Brownlow fell in with a small patrol close to the town, one man of which running off, gave the alarm; by this means the greatest part of them made their escape, thirty three excepted, four of whom were killed, the remainder taken prisoners, with the loss upon the part of the King's troops, four men wounded, three of them very slightly.—The Royal Gazette, No. 382, May 27, 1780.

CHATHAM, May 17.

May 24. Congress we are told, have obtained a loan of three millions of pounds from France.

A gentleman from Middle-Town Point, informs us that there certainly is a fleet of our allies on the coast, and that several of the officers had been on shore. 'Tis said they consist of near one hundred sail.—The New-York Journal, and the General Advertiser, No. 1879, May 29, 1780.

CHATHAM, MAY 31.

On Friday morning last, about day-break, the 57th regiment from Staten-Island, entered the town of Newark, plundered some of the inhabitants to a very considerable amount, and carried off about twenty of them prisoners.—When they retreated, a few spirited militia pushed their rear very hard, and wounded a few, but we do not learn they killed or took any prisoners. That late gallant officer Capt. Knox (who commanded the forlorn hope at the reduction of Stoney-Point fort)¹ and another of our people, were wounded; the former, it is feared, will not recover, being wounded in the face, and part of his tongue shot away.

On Friday last was executed at camp, near the grand parade, James Coleman of the 11th Pennsylvania regiment, for repeated desertion and forgery. Ten more of different regiments were under similar sentence, but for many important reasons were by the commander in chief fully pardoned.

¹ George Knox was commissioned Ensign of the Ninth Pennsylvania, in February, 1777; Second Lieutenant, March, 1778, and First Lieutenant, February 9th, 1779. He distinguished himself so greatly at Stony Point that Congress "warmly approved and applauded the cool, determined spirit with which he and others led on the forlorn hope, braving danger and death in the cause of their country," and conferred a brevet-captaincy on him. According to "Hejtman's Register" he resigned in April, 1780.

The whole being conducted with much solemnity, we cannot but give the following particulars to the public:— Upon the arrival of the criminals at the place of execution, the attending Chaplain, Rev. Mr. Rogers,¹ of General Hand's brigade, prayed and recommended them severally to God, particularly Coleman, who was first to suffer. Prayer being over, the unfortunate wretch was fixed to the gallows, and, previous to his exchanging worlds, addressed the officers and soldiers of the army with the greatest composure.—The soldiers he earnestly warned against desertion and perjury.—The officers he intreated not to use their soldiers with too much severity, and never to promise them more than they were able to perform.—Putting up a few short ejaculations, he made a signal to be turned off.—A disagreeable accident now happened in the rope's breaking.—Recovering, he mounted the ladder again, repeated his exhortation to the soldiery, and was a second time turned off. The fortitude with which he died, his resolution, tho' modest deportment, during the whole scene, justly astonished the surrounding spectators, and caused them sincerely to wish that by a better life he had procured a better end.—A paper being delivered Mr. Rogers, he read it to the ten survivors; upon their discovery it contained their full pardon, they were amazingly affected, as it was by them totally unexpected.—Pursuant to request, Mr. Rogers embraced so striking an opportunity in pronouncing a concise and pathetic oration to which all who could possibly hear paid particular attention.—It is ardently wished that Coleman's unhappy fate may suitably awe;—while the unparalleled act of lenity from our illustrious chief, in remitting the sentences of the others, must, if rightly implored, influence all who are possessed of any just feelings, to a strict discharge of the

The BACHELOR'S MEDITATION in a LOVE-FIT HOUR.

SHALL I, unblam'd in rhyme commend
The maid I love, my fairest friend,
Now sitting singing sweet and free,
Beneath the shade of yonder tree;
Whose tow'ring top ascends so high,
It seems a neighbour of the sky;
And all its boughs still wave and play,
To fan the scorching heat away.
Around its foot, on ev'ry side,
Beneath its branches far and wide,
Doth jessamine and roses grow,
And ev'ry fragrant flower blow.
There Venus doth her chariot rest;
There Cupid pants on Phebe's breast;
Who taught me there to yield to love,
In spite of reason and of Jove.
Her cheerful chat and airy mien,
Laid the vapours, cur'd the spleen,
Made my spirits brisk and gay,
And stole my ravish'd soul away.
Every feature, every line,
Every motion seem'd divine;
Nor could Calypso in her isle,
So softly speak or sweetly smile.
O had I wings, like yonder dove,
And charms to make the goddess love,
How swift I'd wing the yielding air
To her, the object of my prayer.
Then all in rapture her fair breast,
With eager arms to mine I'd press;
And with ten thousand kisses sweet,
Her rosy lips I'd fondly greet.
In mutual love we'd spend the day,
And in the night we'd sport and play,
Till her fair frame, dissolv'd in charms,
Should softly slumber in my arms.

Mr. Elihu Spencer, of this place, exceedingly regretted by all her acquaintance; and on Monday evening her remains were interred in the Presbyterian burying place, attended by a large number of the most respectable inhabitants of the town and neighbourhood.

Preparations are making to land the expected French army at Rhode-Island; and a variety of circumstances contribute to brighten our expectations of the ensuing campaign.

On Thursday night last a number of armed villains, supposed to be about twelve, broke open the house of Mr. John Holmes, of Upper-Freehold, in Monmouth county, and robbed him of 4 or 500 pounds continental money, a silver watch, a gold ring, silver buckles, a firelock, a pair of pistols, clothing, provisions and ammunition.

Last week John and Robert Smith, charged with the murder of Mr. Boyd, a Collector in Chester county, Pennsylvania, mentioned under the Philadelphia head, were taken up in Monmouth in this state, and committed to the county gaol, by the son of David Forman, Esq. a youth of nineteen. After receiving the fire of Robert Smith at twenty yards distance, he took them both, and drove them before him to the guard,—since which they have been removed to the new gaol in Philadelphia, for trial.—It is said they were on their way to New-York, which has become a place of refuge for murderers and villains of every denomination.

On Saturday last about 10 o'clock, A. M. as Mrs. Morgan, wife of Mr. Joseph Morgan, of Pensawkin, Mrs. Roker, and one other woman, were going in a market boat from Philadelphia, near the mouth of Pensawkin creek, were overset by a squall of wind; by which unfortunate accident the above persons were drowned. Soon after two of their bodies were taken up, one of them was Mrs. Morgan's, which was interred the next day.

Friday morning last a party of the enemy from New-York made a descent upon Newark, and carried off several inhabitants prisoners. Further particulars have not yet come to hand.

On Saturday last at Mr. Joseph Robins, near Allentown, was attempting to dock a colt, he received a stroke on the head with the creature's fore foot, by which he was instantly killed.

The account of the execution at Morristown we are obliged to defer 'till next week, for want of room.

By His Excellency the Governor.

A GENERAL Court-Martial of the state, whereof Col. *John Neilson*¹ was appointed President, having been ordered by the Governor for the trial of Col. Sylvanus Seely, on the 27th day of April last, on the following charges against him while commanding the State Regiment in Elizabeth-Town, in the latter end of the year 1779, viz.

1. That he suffered goods and merchandize to be landed from the enemy's flag-boat within our lines, thereby permitting an illicit trade to be carried on between the inhabitants of this state and the enemy.

2. That he suffered those who came with a flag, some of whom were fugitives from this state, frequently to tarry all night on shore without any necessity, giving them an opportunity to hold conferences with the disaffected inhabitants, to gain intelligence, transact commercial affairs, and promote desertions from our troops.

3. That he partook of this illicit trade himself, having goods taken out of the flag-boat and carried to his quarters.

4. That of his own authority he gave permission to persons to go to the enemy, either to stay with them or return; and also gave permits to persons of suspected characters to pass his guards, who carried provisions to the enemy.

5. That he authorized privates in the regiment to exercise command, and to rank and draw pay as officers, contrary to the constitution of the state, the law for raising the said regiment, to the damage and expense of the state.

And the said Court having met and proceeded to the trial of the said Col. Seely, upon the several charges aforesaid, pronounced their sentence or judgment, by which they unanimously declare, "that the said Col. Sylvanus Seely is not guilty of any one or more of the said charges, "but on the contrary, that during his command at Elizabeth-Town, he is entitled to the character of a good soldier, a vigilant officer, and faithful citizen, and as "such deserves the gratitude of his country;" which sentence or judgment I do approve of and confirm.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Sussex county, New-Jersey, dated May 16.

On the morning of the 12th Instant, Lt. Col. William Bond¹ had received intelligence of a person who calls himself Capt. Land, who was recruiting for the Indians in North Hampton county State of Pennsylvania—And concealed his recruits on the Blew Mountains, at Tottamy's Gap, and that in the evening of the said day Mr. Land and his party was to march to join the Indians; in consequence of which Col. Bond raised a party of ten men, and way laid the roads where he expected them to march, and fell in with them about eight o'clock in the evening, when a smart firing ensued, but for a short space, the enemy being weaker than was expected, soon gave way. Mr. Land made his escape after receiving some wounds, leaving his hat, knapsack, gun and a large quantity of blood on the ground—Two others which were all we could discover of his party, fell into our hands, one of which is slightly wounded—The party behaved with activity and spirit on this occasion, and deserves all the applause due them as free Men and Friends to their Country.

Thursday evening last a party of about 30 refugees, from New-York, landed at Stoney-Point on Raritan River, and from thence went to Woodbridge, where they made Justice Freeman, Mr. Edgar, and six other white persons and two negroes prisoners, whom they carried off to New-York.

¹ Captain in Martin's Regiment, New Jersey Militia, July to November, 1776; Captain Fourth New Jersey, November 28th, 1776; resigned December 2d, 1777, and subsequently served as Lieutenant-Colonel, New Jersey Militia.

Last week 34 of the convention troops, Hessians, were taken up in Monmouth county. They were on their way to New-York, and piloted by a person as yet unknown. These gentry are sent to Philadelphia, where it is hoped they will be taken proper care of.

Early on Sunday morning last Major Van-Emburg of Bordentown, with eight or nine others, being at Tom's river on a fishing party, were surprised while a-bed by a number of armed tory refugees, and put on board a vessel for New-York; but they found means to make their escape.

“Captain Randolph was exchanged on Friday last, after being a prisoner fifteen months, to the great joy of all his friends, but greater mortification to all the traders and tories in this quarter.”

Mr. Rivington, in a “Gazette Extraordinary,” dated the 29th ult. announces the reduction of Charlestown on the 12th, which, he says, he publishes by authority; but as the twenty-five days have since elapsed without an express having arrived at Philadelphia confirming the account, it may be reasonably presumed that it either took its rise from the surrender of fort Moultrie, or proceeded alone from the fertility of the royal Printer's invention.

Head-Quarters, Morristown, May 13, 1780.

THE Marquis de la Fayette will have the honour to deliver you this.

I am persuaded Congress will participate in the joy I feel, at the return of a gentleman who has distinguished himself in the service of his country so signally; who has given so many and so decisive proofs of his attachment to its interests, and who ought to be dear to it by every motive. The warm friendship I have for him conspires with considerations of public utility to afford me a double satisfaction in his return.

During the time he has been in France, he has uniformly manifested the same zeal in our affairs, which animated his conduct while he was among us, and has been, upon all occasions, an essential friend to America.

He merits, and I doubt not Congress will give him, every mark of consideration and regard in their power.

I have the honour to be, with perfect respect,

Philadelphia, June 14.

Extract of a letter from Morristown, June 9.

“The day before yesterday the enemy came out from New-York, via Staten-Island, and landed at Elizabeth Town, about 5000.—Our army all moved to meet them: The militia turned out with spirit—skirmishing in abundance; one militia Captain with 4 men took 16 British. It is said the enemy intended for this town:—They have been between Connecticut Farms and Springfield and burnt every house in the former except one:—They have been drove back to Elizabeth-Town Point, where they lie behind our entrenchments:—Our army is at the Short Hills, on this side Springfield. The militia are near the enemy, and keep a constant popping at them.—I believe New-York is very bare of troops. The Tories were so sure of the enemy’s succeeding, that they sent word to their friends at Elizabeth-Town, that they should pay them a visit the day after the enemy came over: They are balked.—The affair is not settled yet. Mr. Ludwig, of your city, and Baker General of the army, was in the action, and took a prisoner.”

Extract of a letter from an intelligent Gentleman in the neighbourhood of Morristown, dated June 9, 1780.

“Although extremely fatigued, I catch a moment to inform you that I have just returned from Elizabeth Town, where I have been reconnoitring the enemy’s situation and strength.

To give you any tolerable idea of their ravages and cruelty is beyond my descriptive abilities—They came out in force on Tuesday night and Wednesday morning, and landed in Elizabeth before day. Most observers differ in the account of their numbers; from my own observation, I suppose them about 5000, with 17 pieces of artillery, and every preparative for a lengthy march.

They advanced to Connecticut Farms, about five miles distance, very early in the morning of Wednesday; and altho' they observed great discipline and decorum in Elizabeth Town, yet at the farms, every step was marked with wanton cruelty and causeless devastation.—They set fire to and entirely destroyed the Presbyterian church, and 14 dwelling houses and barns, so that there are (I think) but two dwelling houses remaining in that fertile settlement. But, alas, Sir, this is only one part of the horrid scene!

“In this neighbourhood lived the Rev. Mr. James Caldwell, whose zeal and activity in the cause of his country had rendered him an object worthy of the enemy's keenest resentment.

“His vigilance and attention had always evaded every attempt to injure him, and therefore it was now determined to wound him in an unguarded part: Following the absurd principles of too many of our incautious countrymen, he left his wife and family at home, trusting to the politeness and humanity of the enemy towards an amiable woman, and a number of helpless and innocent children, tho' he did not think it prudent to trust them with his own safety: but alas, his confidence in their benevolence towards the helpless has been his destruction. Soon after their possessing themselves of the neighbourhood a soldier came to the house, and putting his gun to the window of the room where this worthy woman was sitting (with her children and a maid with an infant in her arms, along side of her) he shot her through the lungs dead on the spot: Soon after an officer with two Hessians came in and ordered a hole dug, and her body thrown in, and the house to be set on fire.

“At the earnest request of an officer of the new levies and with some difficulty, the body was suffered to be carried to a small house in the neighbourhood, and Mr. Caldwell's dwelling house immediately set on fire, and everything belonging to him consumed together. The only comfort arising to this afflicted family is, that the wretch who served as the executioner of this murdered lady (who from her excellent character deserved a better fate) did his business so effectually, that she lost her life without distress or pain. Thus it is that even the tender mercies of the wicked are cruelty. This melancholy affair, with their cruel burnings, has raised the resentment of the whole country to the highest pitch, they are ready almost to swear an everlasting enmity to the very name of a Briton. So far is this cruelty and devastation terrifying to submission, that it rouses the most timid to feats of desperate heroism.

“A most worthy man, who has for more than four years past devoted himself to the service of his country, is thus left with nine small children, destitute of even a shift of cloaths to comfort them. Many of the inhabitants are in a similar situation; some widows, some aged, some infirm.

“So many have suffered and are daily suffering among us, that it is impossible any thing considerable can be done for them here, more than to provide for their present necessities. Shall I beg in behalf of these worthy tho’ unfortunate fellow citizens, suffering in the common cause, that you will exert yourself among your acquaintance to afford them some relief. The difficulty of obtaining linen, cloaths &c. &c. is insurmountable among us. A small pittance saved from your luxuries will rejoice the hearts of our desponding brethren, and engage others to step forth with firmness to oppose the foes of America and mankind.

“It wounds the heart of the brave and venturous citizen, to behold the piteous, heart-rending sufferings of the widows, children and dependants, of those who have nobly fought the battles of our country, and bled in her righteous cause, while those who fly from the appearances of danger are rioting in the spoils of those, who bear the heat and burden of the day.

“I know your generous heart will bear a part with the afflictions of every sufferer in so glorious a cause, and your benevolent hands will be ready to exert themselves to obtain the relief that may be in your power.

“But to return, the enemy, being opposed by a regiment of Col. Dayton’s and such militia as could be suddenly collected, made a slow advance, till they came to a bridge at the entrance of Springfield, where the militia had an old iron 4 pound field piece, which they used to such purpose, that the enemy were drove back for some considerable distance.

Being thus encouraged, Col. Dayton’s regiment and the militia together, pressed upon them, and killed and wounded many of them; the general estimate is about 100. As our people were reinforced they gained firmness, and at night the enemy had secured no farther than Connecticut Farms. In the night, having received an express from Gen. Clinton in South Carolina, they immediately began retreat, and by 10 o’clock on Thursday they had gained Elizabeth-Town-Point, from whence they sent off all their waggons, a part of their artillery, and some of their cavalry. Previous to this Lord Stirling, with General Hand’s brigade and the militia, was detached close on their rear, and between Elizabeth-Town and the Point had a very severe skirmish—some loss on both sides. Never did troops behave better than ours. The militia behaved beyond anything that could have been expected. The Continental officers gave them the greatest credit. It is said the enemy had been persuaded that after the taking of Charlestown the militia would all submit, and the Continental troops would desert. It seems as if the militia had known these suggestions. Never did they so universally turn out on such short notice, and never with better spirits. I left this morning, at least 2000 of them below the mountains, and more flocking down continually: Col. Dayton deserves the greatest credit, as does all his officers, who behaved unexceptionally.

“The enemy were all day yesterday manœuvring to bring on a general engagement, and General Washington trying to draw them from their strong possession on the Point, where it was impossible to attack them to advantage. Both have failed and General Washington hath drawn back the main body above Springfield to refresh them, as they were exceedingly fatigued, with two days and two nights lying on their arms. Every thing has been carried on with great propriety, and we are in hopes their gentry will be obliged to retire, notwithstanding their sanguine expectations. Gen. Knyphausen it is said, brought over his carriage, expecting to have considerable use for it. There is a brigade left to watch their motions at Elizabeth-Town, with a number of the militia. They are in such force, that I am clear of opinion they intend to penetrate the country, and from some hints that have dropped, they have Pennsylvania in their eye, if they can beat General Washington.

“I would give you many more particulars, but I am wearied beyond measure with the fatigue of three days ride, and no rest at night, and I write in pain.

“P. S. I forgot to mention a circumstance relative to Mrs. Caldwell’s death, that is very striking. Some of the soldiers attacked a young lady about three miles from Mr. Caldwell’s house, and one of them presenting a fixed bayonet to her breast, swore he would kill her, for that she was the wife of Mr. Caldwell. He was with difficulty prevented from putting his threats into execution by a young officer who knew the lady, and swore to him that she was not the wife of Mr. Caldwell or any other person. This was previous to her murder. And on their retreat from Connecticut Farms, a soldier bragged at Elizabeth-Town that he had shot this unhappy lady.”

The Slave is near 6 feet high, strong and well made; had on, and took with him, a variety of cloaths, but those he will most probably wear are, a suit of superfine mixt broad cloth, a new red great cloth, white stockings, half boots, a black velvet stock and a beaver hat, but little worn. He appears to be 40 odd years of age, speaks good English, reads and writes a tolerable hand, and is a decent and well behaved ingenious fellow, capable of a variety of works. His name is Michael Hoy but may go by some other, and it is probable he may travel as a servant to a white man who is supposed to have gone off with him, and as such may change his address. He went off in the night of the 20th instant. Five Hundred Dollars will be given, and all charges paid for securing the slave and the horse, or Two Hundred and Fifty Dollars, for either, paid by —The Pennsylvania Journal, June 14, 1780.

CHATHAM, JUNE 14.

Last night sennight, between 11 and 12 o'clock, a body of the enemy commanded by General Kniphausen in person, landed at Elizabeth Town Point, who being timely discovered by our guards, gave the troops that were in town, commanded by Col. Dayton,¹ an opportunity to assemble, but, on reconnoitering them, our force was found inadequate for an attack, of course a retreat became indispensable, which was performed in good order, with the enemy in their rear, until they arrived at Connecticut Farms, where they fell in with the Jersey brigade, and being joined by a few militia, they posted themselves on an advantageous piece of ground, thinking it advisable to check the advance of the enemy, which, with singular bravery, they effectually did, and annoyed them considerably, driving them back some distance. They then brought up some field pieces, which played briskly, but happily without any effect. Our people kept them here about two hours until they were reinforced by the second division, which had landed some time after the first, and had marched up hastily. The enemy then gained that ground, though not without considerable loss on their side, and some wounded on ours. Their advance after that was very tardy, yet they seemed to show an inclination to possess themselves of Springfield, until we gave them a few shot from a piece of cannon, not without some effect, which obliged them again to retreat, and the day was spent in continual skirmishing, by which the enemy suffered amazingly, we having, since their retreat, found forty or fifty of their dead, which they had secretly buried; among the number, it is said, was a son of Count Donop, who has met the fate of his hapless father.

¹ Col. Elias Dayton, of the 3d New Jersey Regiment. See New Jersey Archives, 2d Series, 1: 78; Hatfield's History of Elizabeth, 651; Proceedings New Jersey Historical Society, 1st Series, 9: 175-192.

As soon as they came to Connecticut Farms, seven miles from the place of their landing, they began the exercise of their awful cruelty. They first set fire to the house of Deacon Wade, and then to the Presbyterian church; but soon advancing to the house of the Rev. Mr. Caldwell, they had an opportunity of reaching the summit of that cruelty after which they have been climbing for so many years. Mr. Caldwell could not remove his property, nor all his family. His amiable wife, with a babe of eight months, and one of three years old, with the housekeeper and a little maid, were left. Mrs. Caldwell having dressed herself, and put her house in order, retired with those into a back room, which was so situated that she was entirely secured against transient shot from either party, should they dispute the ground near the house, which happened not to be the case. The babe was in the arms of the housekeeper, the other child the mother held by the hand, all sitting upon the side of the bed, when one of the barbarians advancing round the house, took the advantage of a small space, through which the room was accessable, and fired two balls into that amiable lady, so well directed that they ended her life in a moment.* This horrid deed appears the more cruel in the eyes of all who knew the lovely person, the sweet temper, and the not only inoffensive but benevolent life of that dear mother of nine children now living, the eldest of which is but just turned sixteen. From some circumstances this appears not to have been the act of one rash inconsiderate villain, but the effect of deliberate orders given previous to their coming to the place, that she should be murdered.—She was stripped of part of her clothes, but her corps was preserved from the flames by two or three of the enemy whose humanity was not yet extinct. This was a murder without provocation, and most opposite to humanity; for although her husband has uniformly defended the American cause, yet he has not only avoided cruelty himself, but used his utmost endeavours to prevent it being done by others; and as to herself, one would have thought her sweet appearance, and amiable life, would have protected her from even British or Tory cruelty. Not satiated by this horrid deed, after stripping the house they set fire to it and eleven more dwelling-houses in the neighbourhood, with the out-houses, &c.

Thus has British cruelty been led to perfection by the hirelings of Hesse. Six widows are burnt out; some very aged, and others with small families; and almost all the houses in the neighbourhood which were not burnt, were torn to pieces, and entirely plundered.

Consider Americans! what you have to expect from such enemies, and what you have to do! If the tribes of Israel rose as one man to revenge the cruelty offered an individual of no good character, (Judges xix.) what ought to be our conduct when the fairest innocence is no protection; when the condition of widowhood, attended with age, or a large offspring, is no defence.

The militia, on this occasion, turned out more expeditiously, and fought more bravely than ever known before. In the night the enemy retired to Elizabeth Town Point, where they were followed by the militia and a detachment from the army, who bravely attacked their advanced parties, and took about twenty prisoners on this occasion.

From what we can collect from the inhabitants of the Farms, many of whose houses were filled with their wounded, they must have suffered considerably. General Sterling had his thigh broke.

Their brutality to some women in the Farms would make even Savages blush; and we are informed, from undoubted authority, that the same line of conduct has been pursued in Elizabeth Town toward some of the first characters.

The loss sustained the first day, by the Jersey brigade, was 1 Ensign and six rank and file killed; 4 Subalterns and 30 rank and file wounded; and 12 missing. A return of the killed and wounded of the militia we have not obtained.

We have taken about fifty prisoners; and several deserters have come in.—They still remain at Elizabeth Town and the Point.

Extract of a letter from Pumpton, dated May 6.

“Last Friday sennight two waggons belonging to Mr. Gamble, Commissary, &c. on their way from Fish Kill to Morris Town, were stopped in Smith’s Clove by a party of the enemy from New York, and robbed of most part of whatever was valuable in them. In one of them was a trunk of hats for some officers in our army;—one trunk of books and cloathing belonging to Capt. Garanger of the artillery;—and another very large trunk of valuable cloathing of every kind, together with a collection of books, &c. the property of Samuel Witham Stockton, Esq;¹ of this state, who arrived about six months ago from Holland. After the trunks were broke open, and emptied, they were left, with a considerable number of books and some trifling articles in the woods w[h]ere the robbery was committed—A few days ago the two last mentioned gentlemen, with a party of continental troops, scoured the Mountains in that quarter, and searched all the disaffected houses in the neighbourhood of the clove, suspected of harbouring those infamous refugee robbers, but met with little success in making any important discoveries. Instead of the enemy's discouraging these villians, I am informed they stimulate and endeavour to protect them from the immediate punishment due to their crimes, by putting commissions into their pockets as officers, thereby providing against an accidental capture."

¹ Col. Jacob Arnold was a son of Samuel Arnold, who came from Connecticut in 1730, and settled in Washington Valley, three miles northwest of Morristown, where he bought 300 acres of land from William and Richard Penn. He married Phebe Ford, October 16th, 1748. His son Jacob was born December 14th, 1749; he married first, Elizabeth Tuthill, of Morris county, October 1st, 1770; she died May 9th, 1803; he married second, Sarah H. Nixon, December 26th, 1807; she was born October 1st, 1783; died July 29th, 1846. He died March 1st, 1827. Before the Revolution he was associated in partnership with Thomas Kinney, at one time Sheriff of Morris county, a large landowner, and landlord of a tavern on the north side of the public green in Morristown. Arnold was captain of a troop of Light Horse at the beginning of the Revolution, and likewise succeeded Kinney in the proprietorship of the tavern mentioned, which, for a century, was known in local history as Arnold's tavern. It was in that building that Washington had his headquarters during the winter of 1776-7, after the battles of Trenton and Princeton. In 1886 it was about to be demolished, to make way for a modern building, but was bought by Mrs. Julia Keese Colles, who thought it a pity to sacrifice such a relic of the Revolution, and she had it removed to the Colles estate, on Mt. Kemble avenue, where it has been remodeled for All Souls' Hospital. The rooms occupied by Washington are preserved intact. See "History of the Arnold Tavern, Morristown, N. J.," by Philip H. Hoffman, Morristown, 1903.

A GENERAL Court-Martial of the state, whereof Col. John Neilson was President, having been ordered by the Governor for the trial of Col. Sylvanus Seely,¹ on the 27th day of April last, on the following charges against him while commanding the State Regiment in Elizabeth Town, in the latter end of the year 1779, viz.

1. That he suffered goods and merchandize to be landed from the enemy's flag-boat within our lines, thereby permitting an illicit trade to be carried on between the inhabitants of this state and the enemy.

2. That he suffered those who came with a flag, some of whom were fugitives from this state, frequently to tarry all night on shore without any necessity, giving them an opportunity to hold conferences with the disaffected inhabitants, to gain intelligence, transact commercial affairs, and promote desertions from our troops.

3. That he partook in this illicit trade himself, having goods taken out of the flag-boat and carried to his quarters.

4. That, of his own authority, he gave permission to persons to go to the enemy, either to stay with them or return; and also gave permits to persons of suspected characters to pass his guards, who carried provisions to the enemy.

5. That he authorized privates in the regiment to exercise command, and to rank and draw pay as officers, contrary to the constitution of the state, the law for raising the said regiment, to the damage and expence of the state.

And the said Court having met and proceeded to the trial of the said Col. Seely, upon the several charges aforesaid, pronounced their sentence or judgment, by which they unanimously declare, "That the said Col. S. Seely, "is not guilty of any one or more of the said charges, "but, on the contrary, that during his command at Elizabeth Town, he is entitled to the character of a good

TRENTON, JUNE 14.

The Honourable the Legislature of this State have passed an Act to raise and embody, for a limited time, six hundred and twenty-four men, for the defence of the frontiers of the state; and an Act establishing a fund for sinking and redeeming the proportion of the bills of credit of the United States, assigned as the quota of this state.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman at Baskenridge, dated June 10, 1780.

“On Tuesday night the 6th inst. the enemy landed at Elizabeth-Town Point, and early on Wednesday morning advanced in force, as far as Connecticut Farms, within about two miles of Springfield. The Jersey brigade, which lay at or near Elizabeth, skirmished with them all the way up; and such of the militia as could collect, joined in opposing their progress, and fought in a manner that does them great honour, and if possible, exalts the reputation of the Jersey Militia. Their progress was stopped at a small bridge by a single cannon, aided probably by their own apprehensions. The skirmishing was very smart and bold on our part, so as to do them considerable damage; but as they continued to advance, but few of their killed and wounded fell into our hands.—

They wounded four officers of the Jersey brigade, and killed one, a Mr. Ogden; I am uncertain of the number of men killed and wounded; only sixteen wounded, and two of them British, have come to this place, which is the nearest hospital.

“General Knyphausen commanded in person, and it is said they brought with them seven days provision, a great number of waggons, &c. as if they intended to make a stand at some distance in the country, perhaps on the first mountain; but a strong detachment of our army marching down as far as Springfield to meet them, arrived in the evening within two or three miles of the enemy and halted till next morning, when a battle was expected; the enemy, in the mean time, not by moonlight, but under cover of a dark cloud, attended with some rain, retreated to Elizabeth-Town Point, where they have remained quiet ever since. General Washington remains with the main body of our army at Short-Hills; General Maxwell with some militia lie as an advanced party at or near Elizabeth.

“According to British custom, they have burnt almost every building in Connecticut Farms, above 20 in number; and agreeable to British humanity, they shot Mrs. Caldwell, a lady of the most amiable character, as she sat in her parlour, attended only by her maid and small child.”

Since the enemy have been at Elizabeth-Town Point, a party of sixteen of our militia having been out upon a scout, fell in with seventeen of the enemy, whom they brought off, with their arms, without firing a gun.

It is reported that part of the British troops is arrived at Staten-Island from South-Carolina.

We are informed that the enemy still continue at Elizabeth-Town Point inactive, except scouting parties that are daily skirmishing with our militia; in several of which the militia have fought with great spirit, and been successful. Our loss is computed to be about 30 killed and wounded, Capt. Reeves¹ being among the former. The enemy's loss is said to be 150 killed, and as many more wounded.

Extract of a letter from New-Barbados, Bergen county, dated May 30, 1780.

“This morning a detachment of about 300 of the enemy, under the command of Col. Boskirk, made a descent into this county. Their object was professedly to murder and carry off the militia. They divided themselves into two parties, each going upon a scout. They met at the house of J. Zabriskie at about one o'clock, A. M. and mistaking each other for the rebel guard, (as they call it) fell upon each other in a most furious manner, and by the discharge of their muskets and use of the bayonet, they appear to have made a dreadful slaughter; the ground round the house being in a measure covered with blood, and in some places the clotted gore remained in heaps when I arrived at the spot, which was at five o'clock.—After this, they finding their mistake, retreated over and took up the bridge to prevent our men pursuing them. 'Tis said they had seven or eight killed on the spot, besides wounded --- All were carried off."

The 4th instant, thirty-five Americans, including five officers, made their escape from the prison ship at New-York, and got safely off.

Thursday last a party of about thirty of the enemy landed at Closter, in Bergen county, in order to plunder cattle from the inhabitants; but while they were collecting them, they were attacked by a party of our militia under the command of Capt. Blanch, who retook the cattle, killed one and wounded two of the plunderers, and drove them to their boats, without any loss on our side.

Saturday last Generals Arnold and Wayne passed through this place on their way to Head-Quarters; also Major Lee, with his corps of light-dragoons, to join the main army.

Saturday night last the alarm-gun at Princeton was spiked up by a person unknown; but the spike has since been taken out by heating the cannon. It is hoped the villain will be discovered and meet a proper reward.

Sunday last 6 armed French vessels, viz. 3 ships, 2 brigs and a polacre, arrived at Philadelphia, in 19 days from Cape Francois, laden with West-India produce.

Extract of a letter from Monmouth county, June 12.

"Ty, with his party of about twenty blacks and whites, last Friday afternoon took and carried off prisoners Capt. Barns Smock and Gilbert Vanmarter; at the same time spiked up the iron four-pounder at Capt. Smock's house, but took no ammunition: Two of the artillery horses, and two of Capt. Smock's horses, were likewise taken off."

The above mentioned Ty is a negro, who bears the title of Colonel, and commands a motly crew at Sandy-Hook.

Major-General DICKENSON¹ set out from this place yesterday morning, to take upon him the command of the Jersey Militia, in order to co-operate with the Continental Army in repelling the incursions of the enemy, who have taken post at Elizabeth-Town-Point.

It must give the most heart-felt pleasure to the Friends of Liberty and the Independence of our country, to observe with what unanimity and resolution the militia have turned out for the support of the common cause and gives a happy presage of our final success.

The following extract is taken from a letter received by a gentleman in Morris-Town from his friend in Sussex county.

“On Sunday morning the 4th instant, about one o’clock, Major Hoops having reason to believe that disaffected persons were in his neighbourhood, discovered a fellow in company with a woman near his house; he immediately questioned them; the woman prevaricated, and the man hesitated in his answers, gave him suspicions; upon which he desired them to walk into the house, that he might be fully assured of what they told him. Major Hoops on his way to the house looking round, found the man running away; he pursued and took him, not without wounding the fellow through the arm with a small sword, upon seeing a cocked pistol in his hand. He was discovered to be a Levy soldier in his regimentals, belonging to the corps of Jersey Volunteers; on bringing him to the light, the Major presented one of the pistols he had taken from him to his head, and resolutely declared he would put him to death if he did not inform him of his designs in coming to this part of the country. He said that about three weeks ago he came out with Lieutenant Moody, and another, from New-York, who had received instructions from General Knyphausen, but he kept them secret; only hinting that he was to take some person off within two miles of Morris-Town, but finding that he was not at home, nor would be before the 15th of this month, they came up here in order to pass their time away till the person returned: That he had left Moody in the road near the Moravian Mills; that he had liberty to go to his uncle's, one Matthew Lowrey, where he was then going had not Major Hoops disappoint him; and that he was to meet Moody and his companion on the top of Jenny Jump mountain on Thursday night, when they were to proceed on their intended expedition.

“After leaving him under guard, and collecting his own people and a few of his neighbours, pursuit was given to Moody, but unfortunately could not make any discoveries.”

TRENTON, June 14

Since the enemy have been at Elizabeth-Town Point, a party of sixteen of our Militia having been out upon a scout, fell in with seventeen of the enemy, whom they brought on, with their arms, without firing a gun.

It is reported that part of the British troops is arrived at Staten-Island from South-Carolina.

We are informed that the enemy still continue at Elizabeth Town Point inactive, except scouting parties that are daily skirmishing with our Militia; in several of which the Militia have fought with great spirit, and been successful. Our loss is computed to be about 30 killed and wounded, Capt. Reves being among the former. The enemy's loss is said to be 150 killed, and as many more wounded.

Saturday night last the alarm-gun at Princeton was spiked up by a person unknown; but the spike has been since taken out by heating the cannon. It is hoped the villain will be discovered and meet a proper reward.

Copy of a letter taken at the house of the very Reverend and Holy Priest JAMES CALDWELL; Retailer of Sedition on Sundays; and Ammunition Shoes and Boots the Week Days; as Store-Keeper for the annoyance of the bodies of the Loyalists, military and civil. The Letter shews how the unfortunate men in high stations of service, are required for quitting their duty to the King and Parent Country, in obedience to the Reptiles of America, the Scoundrels of the Congress!—The gallantry of an enemy, who acts as a soldier in the field, and as a man of humanity, when the accidents of war puts it in his power, must be esteemed and respected by the British, though they regret the delusion of such a character, General Maxwell is in this predicament regarded! Yet the ungrateful villains who he is serving in rebellion, oblige the Veteran to keep house, for want of Soles to his Boots! Is it not time for America to hang the authors of their Shame and Misery?

Dear Sir

Camp, Feb. 22, 1780.

"I HAVE sent my boy with my old boots to get them soled, and some other parts of them made water tight, although they did very well in dry weather, they have answered my purpose but very indifferently for some days past. You will oblige me very much by ordering them to be repaired as soon as possible, as I must keep the house till they return.

The boy will return from Col. Dayton's in the morning, I suppose they can be finished by that time. I wrote a few lines to you some time ago requesting you to furnish me with a pair of boots if in your power, as a General I am almost ashamed to ask it of the Public, but as I serve the public, and they have not thought proper to lodge in my hands money to purchase these necessaries, I take it for granted that they mean we should ask such of them when we stand in need. I have found myself hitherto, but it is now out of my power,

I am, Dear Sir, your very humble Servant,

Wm. MAXWELL.

Three Hundred Waggons were pressed in the County of Bergen and Essex, in order to transport Washington's Baggage and Stores from Morris-Town to West Point.—The New-York Gazette, and the Weekly Mercury, No. 1496, June 19, 1780.

POUGHKEEPSIE, June 19.

The enemy from New-York, have lately made an excursion, which, to judge from the force employed in it, must have had some very important object; altho' not having succeeded in the attainment of it, what they had in view is not quite apparent.

Our accounts of their proceedings are, That before day on Wednesday morning the 7th instant, a body of about 5000, under the command of Gen. Knyphausen, Tryon, and Governor Robertson, crossed the river from Staten-Island to Elizabeth Town Point, and proceeded to the town, where, meeting with no opposition they were employed chiefly as news carriers, in distributing plentifully Rivington's new hand bills (published by authority) giving an account of the surrender of Charlestown to the British invaders. They then advanced four miles further to Connecticut Farms, where they burned fourteen houses, among them the Presbyterian church, and murdered Mrs. Calwell, the ministers lady: They then moved on towards Springfield, but on the way were met by Gen. Maxwell with a small body of Continental troops, and a few of the militia hastily collected, who, at the bridge, near the town, attacked them, and stopped their further progress. Skirmishing however continued, till that part of the Continental troops stationed at Morris-Town, and a body of New-Jersey militia, who assembled with their usual alacrity, had time to come up and oppose them, which was done so effectually, that after suffering much from the well-directed fire of our people, the enemy took the opportunity of a heavy rain in the night, to retire to Elizabeth-Town Point, where, on Saturday (the 13th) when our last advices came away they lay encamped in our old entrenchments, and it is said had been joined by 2000 troops, and 200 light horse from New-York. It is also said, the Generals and some other officers, had sent for their carriages and ladies, as if they intended to make some considerable stay. The loss on either side was unknown. We had upwards of 40 prisoners, and a number of deserters, among whom were 6 Hessian light horse, well mounted and completely equiped. The British General Stirling¹ is said to be badly, if not mortally wounded.—The New-York Journal, and the General Advertiser, No. 1882, June 19, 1780.

The loss sustained the first day¹ by the Jersey brigade was 1 Ensign and 6 rank and file killed, 4 subalterns and 30 rank and file wounded, and 12 missing. TRENTON, JUNE 21.

Extract of a letter from New-Barbadoes, in Bergen county, dated May 27, 1780.

“We have received information from New York, that about 2000 of the enemy sailed from the Hook, on the 23d instant. Some say they are destined for Halifax, others that they are bound to Quebec.

“Twenty-nine negroes of both sexes have deserted within two weeks past; upwards of twenty went off in one company.”

Extract of a letter from a continental officer of rank at camp, dated June 13.

“The British troops are now on the Point below Elizabeth-Town; their flanks are secured by the water, which at present makes them unattackable. They advanced, on their landing, to Connecticut-Farms, burning and pillaging; but on the appearance of our army, retreated under cover of a heavy shower of rain before midnight, and took their present position. The distress occasioned by their devastations is too shocking to reflect on; an American who could have beheld the scene and not swore vengeance against these savage enemies, ought to have a mark set on him as a curse to the human species.

“On my arrival on the Farms, immediately after they left them, the first object that presented itself to my view was a handsome young country-girl in the most affecting distress and anguish of mind, who had the night before been forcibly subjected to the brutal violence of seven or eight different officers of that army. — — — When we questioned her, she could only answer in broken accents of the most excessive grief — — — that she was ruin'd and wished never again to be spoken to.—

“We proceeded, and came where they had burnt Mr. Caldwell's house, after shooting his wife thro' a window as she was sitting on her bed, with a brace of balls; one entered her left breast, and the other her waist: I saw her corpse, and was informed by the neighbours, it was with infinite pains they obtained leave to bring her body from the house before they set fire to it.

“The situation of poor widows, and numberless other women flying almost naked for protection, having lost their houses and everything in them, was thought comparatively happy. If there is justice to be dispensed in this world from above, it must surely visit these sons of cruelty ere long, whose scarlet crimes are daily filling up the measure of their iniquities.

“I never saw soldiers pant for revenge more than ours do — — — not a deserter from us since we came to the ground, but all anxious for the happy hour when they shall receive orders to engage an enemy who has with coward violence only desolated the weak and unprotected.

“The militia universally flock in all parts, and behave to admiration.”

On Monday evening last the Hon. the General Assembly of this state adjourned to Wednesday the 13th of September next, then to meet at Trenton. During the sitting the following Acts were passed:

1. An Act for altering the place of holding the Inferior Court of Common Pleas and Court of General Quarter Sessions of the Peace in and for the county of Bergen, and for building a temporary gaol in the said county.¹

At a joint meeting of the Council and Assembly on Saturday last, Mr. Israel Morris, of Gloucester county, was appointed state clothier, in the room of Enos Kelsey, Esq. who hath resigned.

Extract of a letter from Camp at Springfield, June 15.

“The enemy still remain at the Point; we have continual skirmishes; last night they attacked our picket, were beat back with loss, and one Hetfield their pilot badly wounded. We are well assured the enemy's loss is near 300 men in their attack at the bridge, numbers of them are daily found in the woods. Yesterday 13 were found dead in a rye-field. Gen. Stirling's wound is thought to be mortal, as his thigh must come off. They are very angry at being deceived by the tories, who assured them the militia would not fight, but join them. Count Donop's son was wounded in the action on Wednesday last. The Iris frigate has got into New-York much disabled by an engagement she has had with the Hermoine French frigate. A large ship, said to belong to Bristol, mounting 24 9-pounders, is also arrived there, almost torn to pieces in an engagement with some of our cruizers, (they say the Trumbull;) she had 90 men kill'd & wounded.”

By a letter from an officer of rank dated the 15th inst. at Springfield, we learn, that the enemy are fortifying on both sides the water at Elizabeth-Town Point, and have nearly completed their bridge --- that by taking this position, they meant to try the complexion of the country, and the temper of our army, in both of which they have been doubtless greatly deceived --- the militia behaved to a charm, and but very few desertions from the continental army --- that the enemy intend to penetrate further into the country as soon as their works are finished, to secure a retreat --- that Sir John Johnson has returned to Canada with his banditti, after having narrowly escaped being taken by Governor Clinton --- that General Stirling of the British is reported to be dead of the wound in his thigh --- that a Captain of the Queen's Rangers has deserted --- and that our army were in the highest health and spirits.

Mrs. WASHINGTON passed through this place, since our last, on her way to Philadelphia.

We hear that a fleet of upwards of one hundred sail, arrived a few days ago at the Hook, supposed to be from Charles-Town, South-Carolina, with a reinforcement.

We are sorry to inform our readers that the garrison of Charles-Town, consisting of 2571 continental troops, including officers of every rank, surrendered prisoners of war on the 12th ult. but the particulars coming late to hand, and being very lengthy, are deferred till our next.

Yesterday thirty-six British and four Hessian prisoners were brought to town under guard.

OPERATIONS

Of the Royal Army in New Jersey

To Mr. RIVINGTON.

Elizabeth Town, June 20, 1780.

Sir,

As the REBELS, agreeable to their usual practice, have published many glaring falsehoods relative to the late movement into Jersey, I have been induced, from a regard to truth, to send you the following account of our operations, which I request you will publish in your Gazette of to-morrow.

A BRITISH OFFICER.

ON Tuesday night the 6th inst. the troops made their first landing upon Elizabeth town meadows, and were crossed over by divisions in succession from Staten Island, with some light artillery, taking their route by Elizabeth Town and Connecticut Farms, towards Springfield. Dayton's regiment, receiving intimation of our approach, retired with precipitation, as did also the other Jersey regiments which compose Maxwell's brigade, from their position near Camp's; the militia of the country, although incapable of making any fixed resistance, did their utmost to incommode the troops upon their march, and collecting from different quarters, they assembled in some force in the vicinity of Springfield, forming a junction with the Jersey brigade at that place, and it is said that in the course of Wednesday the 7th inst. they were supported by another brigade detached from Morris Town.

The troops halted upon some heights beyond Connecticut Farms, where they were ordered to take post till such time as the remainder of the artillery, the provision and other waggons, with the corps which brought up the rear, joined the army. From the circumstance it is probable the rebels conceived, that whatever might have been the original plan, it was intended to penetrate no further. Increasing in numbers, they used every exertion in their power, in flying parties, to fire upon the advanced picquets, and during the course of the day, they made different attacks upon a body of Jagers, which was advanced upon the Springfield road; this produced much firing upon both sides.

During the course of the evening, it is reported that information was received from the southward, which rendered it expedient to defer the object in agitation, and about two hours afterwards the troop, returned towards Elizabeth Town, without a single shot being fired, taking post upon the heights near the point.

On Thursday the 8th inst. the rebels advanced in some force to Elizabeth Town, and made an attack upon the 22d regiment, which was posted some little distance in front of the line: this regiment was ordered to fall back, and the rebels conceiving it was the rear guard of the army, they advanced with some rapidity, but were soon checked, and retired with precipitation.

The loss sustained during the course of this service is inconsiderable, nor can that of the rebels be determined, as they conceal it.

Whilst the troops were advancing to Connecticut Farms, the rebels fired out of the houses, agreeable to their usual practice; from which circumstance, Mrs. Caldwell had the misfortune to be shot by a random ball, what heightens the singularity of this lady's unhappy fate, is, that upon enquiry it appears beyond a doubt, that the shot was fired by the rebels themselves, as it entered the side of the house from their direction, and lodged in the wall nearest to the troops, then advancing: The manner in which the rebels aggravate this unfortunate affair, in their publications, is of a piece with their uniform conduct, plausible, but fallacious, nor is it to be wondered at, if a rebellion which originated in falsehood, is prosecuted with deceit: a soldiery received with smiles one moment, and the following instant butchered (for in a military view it merits no other name) by a set of people, who by their clothing and appointments cannot be distinguished from the quiet inhabitants of the country, may well be supposed to be exasperated; nor need we be surprized at their using the torch to dwellings, which they find hourly occupied by armed men, who either want the generosity or the spirit to close the present unhappy contest, by a manly, open soldier like decision; whatever may be the humane wishes of the Commanders, human nature at times, steps over the barrier of discipline and men of judgment and candour, in the great scale of political reasoning, do not wonder at occurrences, which their private feelings shrink at; such are the effects of intestine divisions; miserable is the fate of that country, which is the theatre of such a quarrel, and accursed is the man, or the set of men, who from motives of private lucre, or inordinate ambition have fanned a flame, which if they were willing, they are now perhaps unable to extinguish.

A BRITISH OFFICER.

TRENTON, June 14.

The honourable the Legislature of this state have passed an act to raise and embody, for a limited time, six hundred and twenty-four men, for the defence of the frontiers of the state; and an act for establishing a fund for sinking and redeeming the proportion of the bills of credit of the United States, assigned as the quota of this state.

[If these 624 should be raised and take the field, the British Bobs will presently make them smart for deserting their families to carry arms against the Lord's anointed.]

On Sunday last two deserters came out of Elizabeth-Town, who report that a fleet had arrived from the Southward, with part of that army, and that the enemy were fortifying at the point.—The Royal Gazette, No. 390, June 24, 1780.

POUGHKEEPSIE, June 26.

We have no accounts, from authority, since our last, of the motions of the enemy—The common report, (which we cannot vouch for the truth of) is, that that body of them which lay entrenched at Elizabeth-Town Point, have divided, one part marching further back into the country, the other up the river towards our fort at West-Point. That General Washington had also divided his army, and with one division was proceeding to the fort, where he was expected to arrive this day; that the other division, under the command of the Marquis La Fayette had been attacked by the enemy, and after a severe engagement, repulsed them. That a number of their ships to the amount of 70, 80 or 90 sail, were coming up the river, and had proceeded as far as Tarry-Town and Teller's-Point, where they had landed considerable bodies of troops on each side of the river, and it was expected would attack the fort, where the garrison had lately been reinforced by Gen. Clinton's brigade, and that the militia were assembling fast from every quarter.—The New-York Journal, and the General Advertiser, No. 1883, June 26, 1780.

Extract of a letter from a Gentleman in Morristown, dated June 23, 1780. Two o'clock P. M.

“The Commander in Chief has for several days past been extending the left wing of our army towards the north, so as to prevent the enemy from out flanking him with their right.

“This morning early General Knyphausen with thirteen regiments, consisting of about 5000 regular troops, exclusive of New Levies, advanced upon our right, which was commanded by Major General Green. The progress of the enemy was slow, at least six hours moving from the Point to Springfield, did but little mischief on their march. When they arrived, were checked by the spirited conduct of a few Continentals and some militia, who gave them so warm a reception, they thought proper to halt and burn every house, except two or three in the town of Springfield.

“Six O Clock P. M. The enemy retire to Elizabeth Town; 11 o'clock, their main body are at the Point below the town.

“24th. It is reported that Clinton is gone up the North river with all the force he can make, exclusive of Knyp-hausen's division, and it is thought by some he will soon join.

“The loss of the killed and wounded on both sides must be very considerable; Col. Angel's¹ and Col. Dayton's regiments have suffered much, a Capt. Thomson² of Col. Lamb's regiment is killed; further particulars I have not yet been able to obtain, and have no doubt but you will receive authentic information of every important circumstance, more just and minute than is possible for me to give at this time; however I conclude, that even these imperfect hints might not be disagreeable.”—The Pennsylvania Gazette, June 28, 1780.

TRENTON, JUNE 28,

Extract of a letter from Monmouth county, dated June 22, 1780.

“Yesterday morning a party of the enemy, consisting of Ty with 30 blacks, 36 Queen's Rangers, and 30 refugee Tories, landed at Conascung. They by some means got in between our scouts undiscovered, and went up to Mr. James Mott's, sen. plundered his and several of the neighbours houses of almost everything in them; and carried off the following persons, viz. Mr. James Mott, sen. Jonathan Pearse, James Johnson, Joseph Dorset, William Blair, James Walling, jun. John Walling, son of Thomas, Philip Walling, James Wall, Matthew Griggs, also several Negroes, and a great deal of stock, but all the negroes, one excepted, and the horses, horned cattle and sheep, were, I believe, retaken by our people. We had wounded, Capt. Walling slightly, a Lieutenant Henderson had his arm broke, two privates supposed to be mortally, and a third slightly, in a skirmish we had with them on their retreat. The enemy acknowledge the loss of seven men, but we think it much more considerable."

Extract of a letter from camp near Connecticut Farms, dated June 18, 1780.

The enemy continue at Elizabethtown without much appearance of a movement, and are busily employed in making fortifications at the different avenues that lead to that place. It is said that their object in coming out at this time was to subjugate the state of New-Jersey, having had intelligence from their friends that the majority of the inhabitants were so distressed that they would not take up arms again to oppose them, and that the army was so pinched for want of provisions that the soldiers were much disposed to desert. Others say that it is in consequence of an express order from Sir Henry Clinton, to facilitate some future operations. If they came on the report of their friends, they have found the circumstances very different, for no militia ever turned out with more cheerfulness and behaved with more intrepidity, and no troops could make a more gallant resistance: If upon the order of Sir Henry, we may expect a very active campaign, and the expence of much blood.—We have had authentic accounts that their killed, wounded, and missing, since their arrival, amount to 300 men. Friday morning we made prisoners of a British Lieutenant and six privates, who came a small distance from their picquets to steal poultry, and before daybreak the same morning, on the mountain near Scotch Plains, a party of villains who came from Staten-Island to steal horses, were discovered by Mr. Casterline, an officer of militia, who killed one Inslee, and took three others, Lesegh, Hutchinson, and Closson. A court-martial is now sitting for the trial of the latter.—A report prevails in our camp this day, that Admiral Arbuthnot arrived at Sandy-Hook yesterday, with a fleet from the southward.”

An humble address to the afflicted friends of American liberty in the State of New Jersey.

GENTLEMEN,

ON this day of general calamity and distress, it becomes every one who wishes well to his country to exert himself to the utmost of his power, in order to extricate her from the savage barbarity and cruelty of her more than savage, unmerciful enemies. In their late exploits of devastation and ruin, we may behold the rancour and spite of their hearts against us in the most lively colours; when despairing of subduing us by force of arms, they are determined to burn and destroy our houses, and if possible desolate our rich and fertile country. But my friends, their power is limited and their rage and vengeance, will I trust in the end fall upon their own guilty heads. How can they expect to succeed in their undertaking, who openly violate all the laws of God and man; and, like their father the devil worry and distress those which they cannot destroy and conquer. They may perhaps plunder and burn some more of our towns and villages, but they cannot burn up our land, nor prevent the rain descending, and the sun shining upon it, to enrich, and fructify it. Therefore let us not be discouraged, but trust in that God who governs the universe, and who will plead our cause against an unrighteous foe, and in due time will deliver us out of their hands.

There is nothing which we have so much reason to fear as the awful prophaneness and extortion of the times, the want of brotherly love, and compassion one for another; these sins cry against us, and call for heavy calamities and judgments to be inflicted upon us; which we all experience in a greater or less degree, and if they might be the means of reforming our land, we should be much advantaged, even if we suffered the loss of all temporal things. But how far our kind father may yet afflict us, we cannot tell, yet it is our duty to take notice of his providence, and eye his hand in all these calamities he hath been pleased to bring upon us, and repent of our sins, and turn unto him with our whole hearts, and then we need not fear what our enemies can do unto us; for nothing can injure our best interest; being protected by an almighty arm, we shall be safe and happy even in death itself. As this address is designed to comfort, and cheer up the hearts of the afflicted and suffering friends of liberty, I hope they will take it kindly that sympathize with them in their heavy calamities, and desolations lately experienced. You my dear friends, are touched in a very tender point; your houses are burnt to ashes; your provision destroyed, &c. These are truly heavy calamities, and call for relief from your compassionate country. And I Hope your country will endeavour to help and relieve you according to its ability. You, my friends, as well as I, have engaged in a great struggle for liberty; we know in some measure the value of the prize for which we are striving, viz. liberty and religion, not only for ourselves but for our children, unto the latest posterity. A prize so great, taken in every view, was perhaps never before disputed on the face of the earth. Therefore no wonder if the enemies thereof exert themselves to destroy our independence, knowing if that is established their power and authority over us is broke, and their kingdom falling to the ground. Since this is the case how earnestly ought we to strive to secure unto ourselves and posterity the unspeakable blessings for which we have thus far so gloriously contended, and so successfully struggled?

I cannot willingly conclude this address without taking notice of the kind hand of providence towards us, in our late remarkable deliverance out of their hands when boasting greatly of their power and might, how suddenly have they fled from our borders and hid themselves out of our sight?

A FRIEND TO LIBERTY.

EXTRACT from GENERAL ORDERS.

Springfield, June 22, 1780.

THE Commander in Chief cannot leave this post without expressing the highest sense he entertains of the conduct and bravery of the officers and men of Maxwell's brigade, in annoying the enemy in their incursions of the 7th instant. Col. Dayton merits particiular thanks.—He also with pleasure embraces this opportunity of testifying that the behaviour of the militia has been such as to do them signal honour, and entitles them to the warmest approbation. There never, since the commencement of the contest, appeared a more general ardour, than animated all ranks upon this occasion, and the spirited opposition given was attended with answerable effects."

Extract of a letter from camp near Springfield, dated June 24, 1780.

“Yesterday morning the enemy marched in force from Elizabethtown, under command of the unprincipled mercenary Knyphausen. After driving our picquets they reached Connecticut Farms about sun-rise, where a scattering fire began between them and a few of our advanced troops, assisted by part of the militia. However, as we had but two Continental brigades, and two brigades of militia, and the enemy’s force by estimation 5,000 men and six pieces of artillery, we could give them but little impediment until they arrived at Springfield bridge, where a very obstinate resistance was made to their passing it. They after very considerable loss, carried it, and entered the village. We retired to the ridge of hills in rear of the town and took our position, expecting them to advance towards Morristown, but after recovering from their fatigue, collecting their killed and wounded, they began a most distressing scene—They burnt the Presbyterian meeting-house and nineteen dwelling-houses, with chief of their standing furniture.—They then began a most rapid retreat, and our troops pursued them to their works, killing and wounding many of them. During their expedition, several of them deserted, both British and Hessians. Our loss was very small, only one officer fell that I have yet heard of, Capt. Lieut. Thompson of artillery, a very brave man.

“This morning some of our horsemen have been down to Elizabethtown, and find that the enemy went over to Staten-Island last night, took up their bridge, and bid us farewell. Deserters and prisoners agree that their expedition will be carried on up the North-River.”

At a special court, held in Burlington last week, Robert Pomeroy was tried for the murder of David Hurly, and convicted on very full evidence. He is sentenced to be hanged the 7th day of July next.—At the same court Joseph Burns, gaoler of Burlington, was indicted for aiding and assisting one Thomas Burney (who was charged with felony) to escape from said gaol, of which said Burns was convicted, and is sentenced to eighteen months imprisonment.

Sunday evening last the Philadelphia troop of light dragoons, arrived here from that city, under the command of Capt. Budden; and early next morning they marched for headquarters. They were excellently well mounted, and made a very martial appearance.

Monday last five Hessian deserters came to town, and yesterday three more including a corporal; they say ten of them came off together with their arms, the other two being on the road. They left the enemy at Elizabethtown Point on Friday evening last.

By a gentleman from Philadelphia we are informed, that three transports, viz. a ship, a brig and a schooner, from Charlestown to New-York, were taken a few days ago, and are arrived in the Delaware. On board of one of the transports were taken a British Cornet and a Hessian Captain.

The LADIES of this town and neighbourhood, animated by the ardour which daily prevails more and more among all ranks of people to distinguish themselves in the present conjuncture of publick affairs, have instituted a subscription to be applied as a donation to the soldiery, for the purpose of rendering their situation more easy and comfortable. A large sum has already been given, and we flatter ourselves that similar subscriptions will circulate throughout the state.

On Friday the 16th instant, a little after sunset, six armed villains came to the house of John Chamberlain, Esq. in Windsor, Middlesex county; three of them entered the house, the other three stood as guards: Putting their bayonets to his breast, they demanded his money; and after much abuse, and many threatenings, they went off, taking with them about £.6:5 in hard, and about £.1000 in Continental money, three pair of silver shoe buckles, three silver stock do. three pair of silver buttons, half a dozen tea spoons, and a variety of the family's wearing apparel.

A Number of waggons being wanted to convey provisions from hence to the army, under the command of his Excellency General Washington; which provisions are forwarded to this place by the citizens of Philadelphia, who have directed us to take them under our care: We give notice that those persons who are willing to engage in this service, shall meet with proper encouragement, by applying to the subscribers, who will furnish the waggons with corn for their horses, and pay the hire of the waggons in gold or silver, or the value thereof in Continental currency, as soon as the service is performed.

THOMAS BARCLAY,
SAMUEL MEREDITH.

Trenton, June 26, 1780.

N. B. Protections will be given to prevent the waggons from being impressed.

THE Subscriber begs leave to inform the Publick that he carries on the Silversmith Business in Princeton, and has constant in his employ an experienced hand in the Watch-Making Business, both in mending and repairing; where any person may have their work done with care and dispatch, by their humble servant,

SAMUEL STOUT.

Three Hundred Pounds Reward.

STOLEN out of the subscriber's stable near Jacob's Town, in the county of Burlington, the 23d inst. at night, a large black STALLION, five years old, full fifteen hands high, with a star in his forehead, a few white hairs on each flank; he is very heavy set, and as likely a horse for the gears as any in the state, without exception; a natural trotter, good carriage; he is barefooted. Whoever takes up said horse and secures the thief, so he may be brought to justice, shall have the above reward, or £.150 for either horse or thief, and all reasonable charges paid.

By accounts from Jersey we are informed, that General Knyphausen made a Moon-light retreat out of that State, on Friday night last, and left his works at Elizabeth Town, to be leveled by the Militia, which was soon effected.

Accounts farther say our loss in the skirmish of the 23d, is 40 killed and wounded, that of the enemy not less than 200 killed and wounded and 30 taken prisoners.

The ship Revolution, Capt. M'Naughton, from Martinique for this port, is put into Matomkin inlet, having been chased by a frigate a little to the southward of our capes. —The Pennsylvania Journal, June 29, 1780.

FISH-KILL, JUNE 29.

Extract of a letter from Camp, New-Jersey, June 25.

“On Friday last, the enemy moved from Elizabethtown-Point to Springfield, in considerable force supposed about 5000 men.—The bridge at Springfield, was pretty obstinately defended by a detachment from Colonel Angel's regiment of Rhode Island troops; nor was it gained by the enemy without a conflict of near forty minutes: This regiment had about forty killed and wounded; our whole loss during the day, does not arise much higher; but from all accounts we have been yet able to collect, the enemy's have been vastly superior:—They retreated with great rapidity, after they had burnt Springfield, to Elizabeth-town-Point, and evacuated that place between twelve and one o'clock the same night."

Last week about 90 sail of great and small vessels appeared in the North-River, nearly opposite Col. Philips's; from hence it was concluded that Sir Harry intended to attack West-Point; in consequence of which the militia in this county was called out, who appeared at their respective places of rendezvous with great alertness. We have since heard that most of the vessels have fallen down the river. 'Tis thought the manoeuvre was made in order to facilitate their burning plan in New-Jersey. Though they burnt the small town of Springfield, they paid dearly for it, having lost in killed and wounded, by the best accounts we can collect, from 500 to 700 men.

On the 19th inst. three spies and horse thieves were hanged at Head-Quarters, near Morristown; they were taken in Monmouth county by some of our militia. The gang consisted of five, one was killed, and another made his escape. They were harboured by a Quaker, who is now in custody, and it is expected he will, in a few days, receive the reward his conduct deserves.—The New-York Packet, and the American Advertiser, No. 177, June 29, 1780.

[TRANSLATION.]

Extract of a letter from Lieut. General Knyphausen, to Lord George Germain, dated New-York, March 27, 1780.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship, that since General Clinton's departure from hence on the 26th of Dec. last, we have had the longest and most severe winter that ever was remembered. All was continent: and horses with heavy carriages could go over the ice into the Jerseys from one island to another; and it is only since the 20th of February that the Rivers and Straights have been navigable.

The rebels thought to avail themselves of this easy communication, and threatened an attack upon Staten Island, where there were 1800 men under the command of Brigadier-General Stirling, who were pretty well intrenched. For this purpose General Washington, whose army was hutted at Morr[i]s-Town, sent a detachment of 2700 men, with six pieces of cannon, two mortars, and some horse, commanded by Lord Stirling, who arrived on the island early in the morning of the 15th of January, our advanced posts having retired upon their approach. They formed the line; and having made some movements in the course of that day, withdrew in the night, after having burnt one house, pillaged some others, and carried off with them about 200 head of cattle. The day of their arrival on the island I embarked 600 men to attempt a passage, and support General Stirling; but the floating ice prevented their success, and obliged them to return. I imagine that the appearance of these transports, with troops on board, which they could see towards the close of the day, induced them to make this sudden retreat, as they could not tell what success they might have. Some prisoners were made in their retreat.

Some days after, an advanced post, which they had at Newark, consisting of one company, was surprized and taken by a detachment from hence, and from Paulis-Hook, under the command of Major Lumm; and the same day General Stirling sent another detachment under Lieut. Col. Buskirk, who surprized the picquet guard at Elizabeth-Town, and made two Majors, two Captains, and 47 men prisoners of war. Both these enterprizes were effected without any loss on our side.

Some time after General Mathew sent a detachment of guards and provincial horse, under the command of Lieut. Col. Norton, to attack a post at John's house upon the White Plains. This did not succeed entirely to his wishes; but the rebels who were posted in a house were however attacked and dislodged, with the loss of 40 men killed and 97 made prisoners, among whom were 1 Lieut. Colonel, 1 Major, and 5 inferior officers. We had 3 killed and 15 wounded.

In the night of the 22d of this month we partly surprized and took a rebel post in the Jersies, consisting of 250 men, of whom we made only 65 prisoners, owing to two embarkations, one from hence under Lieutenant-Col. Macpherson, and another from Kingsbridge under Lieut. Colonel Howard, not arriving at the appointed time. Our loss upon this occasion was very inconsiderable. Capt. Armstrong of the 42d regiment is wounded. By these little enterprizes during the winter, as far as we can ascertain, we have made 320 prisoners, and killed about 65 of the enemy.

By the best intelligence I have been able to get, General Washington's army at Morris-Town consists of about 5000 men, besides militia. There has been a great desertion among them: Tired of the war, and dissatisfied with the depreciated value of their money, a general discontent prevades the whole army.

Extract of a letter from Major-General Pattison, to Lord George Germain, dated New-York, February 22, 1780.

THE intense frost accompanied with great falls of snow, which began here about the middle of Dec. shut up the navigation of this port from the sea, within a few days after Admiral Arbuthnot's fleet, with the troops under the Commander in Chief had taken its departure from Sandy-Hook. The severity of the weather increased to that degree, that towards the middle of January all communications with this city by water, were entirely cut off, and as many new ones opened by the ice. We could scarcely be said to be in an insular state. The passage of the North River, even in the widest part, from hence to Paulis-Hook, (2000 yards) was about the 19th practicable for the heaviest cannon, an event unknown in the memory of man; and very soon after provisions were transported upon sleighs, and detachments of cavalry marched from

New-York to Staten Island, (11 miles) upon the ice. The East River to Brooklyn on Long-Island was also, for many days, blocked up.

Thus circumstanced, My Lord, the city was laid open on many sides to an attack from an enterprising enemy: and notwithstanding the unsuccessful attempt they made upon Staten-Island, the 14th of January, it was nevertheless strongly reported that General Washington was meditating a great stroke upon New-York, with his whole force, by different attacks; and although the undertaking would perhaps have been too daring and unwarrantable, yet the repeated intelligence we received of the many preparations they were making for that purpose, forbid the absolute disbelief of such a plan's being under contemplation: Therefore, having received in November last an address, signed by the principal inhabitants, in behalf of themselves, and fellow citizens, to put themselves in military array, I thought it a favourable occasion of putting the sincerity of their professions to the test, and of adding in the present instance to the security of the city and garrison, which the Commander in Chief was pleased to honour me with the care and command of, as well as establishing in future such an internal defence, as to make a garrison of less strength sufficient in general for its protection. I consulted with General Tryon upon the expediency of this measure, and, as he entirely concurred in my opinion, I did not hesitate (having taken the sense too of some of the principal citizens) to issue a proclamation, calling upon all the male inhabitants, from the age of 17 to 60, to embody and take arms. The cheerfulness and alacrity with which it was universally complied, exceeded all expectation; and in the space of seven days after the proclamation, we had the pleasure to see forty companies, from the six wards of the city, enrolled, officered, and under arms, to the number of 2660, many of the most respectable citizens serving in the ranks of each company. Above 900 purchased arms at their own expence, and the whole were desirous of doing the same, if there had been a sufficient number of firelocks in town for sale; but that not being the case, it was necessary to supply the deficiency from the King's stores. I ordered them however to be issued only as a loan, and upon condition of each Captain's becoming responsible, under his hand, to the storekeeper, for returning to him, when called upon, the number he received, or to pay thirty-six shillings for each stand of arms, if required. The officers appointed to these companies are all persons of known well affected principles.

The laudable spirit and ardour being happily raised, quickly diffused itself amongst all orders of men. The several public departments vied with each other who should be most forward in offering me their services as volunteers, I readily accepted their offers, and formed them into companies accordingly. The old volunteer companies likewise augmented their numbers, and in a very few days I reviewed them altogether under arms, most of them cloathed in uniform at their own expence. General Knyphausen, General Tryon, and all the General Officers were present, and expressed the highest satisfaction at so respectable a body of men. The return which I have the honour to enclose, will shew your Lordship the number of these new associated companies, with the effectives of each. I have besides received a memorial from fifty gentlemen of the city, offering to form themselves into a troop of cavalry, to mount, clothe, and arm themselves at their own expence, and to serve, if called upon, either on York or Long-Island.

The very meritorious and distinguished zeal, which the officers of the royal navy have testified upon this singular occasion, demands my most grateful acknowledgements. The several Captains Edgar, Brenton, Osborne, Ardesoif, and Aplin, whose ships were fast locked up, personally offered me their services, to act with all their seamen on shore; and Capt. Howe, of the Thames, as commanding the whole, signified to me officially by letter the desire of all the officers to serve under my orders, as Commandant, in any manner they could be most useful. These handsome offers were most gratefully embraced, and a circular redoubt near the East River, with eight twelve pounders, and one nine pounder, was made over to their charge; and, as a compliment due, it was immediately called the royal navy redoubt. The number of seamen, about 350, were divided into ten companies, each commanded by a Lieut. of a man of war. Two of them have mounted daily in this redoubt, and were to be re-inforced by five more, in case of an alarm. The other three companies were then to repair to a post, the most suitable for them, upon a height covering the King's Dock-Yard, which was also to be defended by the company formed from the Artificers of the Yard, under the command of the naval store keeper, as Captain.

The sailors belonging to the victuallers, transports, small craft and private trade, armed with pikes, and under the direction of Captain Laird, the Agent, were destined to guard and protect the whole chain of wharffs and shipping, from the ship-yard to the lower battery, at the other extremity of the town.

The several Captains of militia, desirous of making it permanent, and as useful as possible for the service, have readily agreed to, and subscribed many regulations for the good government of it, for fining delinquent, absentees from any parade, or from their tour of duty on the city watch; for keeping in repair and in good condition their arms and ammunition, &c. They are likewise out every Saturday, and the volunteer companies every Sunday, in order to be trained and instructed in the use of arms. I have appointed Mr. Amiel, who served for twelve years as an officer in the 60th regiment, to act as Major of Brigade to the corps of militia, with an Assistant under him; both of whom are to be paid out of the city funds.

The rigour of the frost is now happily abated, and we are flattered with the prospect of a complete thaw; so that all ideas of an attack are now at an end. Indeed it was much to have been wished they had made one, as we were so well prepared to repel it to their cost. We already learn, that the recent display of loyalty here, with the great acquisition of force it produced, has had its effect upon the friends of government without the lines, as well as upon the enemy, who have been apprehensive of an attack being intended upon their main force at Morristown. It has probably too contributed to the great desertion, which has lately prevailed amongst their troops in the Jerseys, upwards of 160 having come over within these few weeks, and inlisted here with the recruiting parties of our provincial corps.

NEW-YORK, July 3.

MAJOR-GENERAL GREEN'S ORDERS.

Head Quarters, Springfield, June 24th, 1780.

The General congratulates the troops under his command, upon the enemy's evacuating this State, after the disgraceful expedition of yesterday, in which they must have suffered great loss and disappointment. He returns his particular thanks to the officers and soldiers of Colonel Angell's regiment, the artillery commanded by Lieut. Colonel Forrest, and the detachment from the Jersey brigade, for their gallant behaviour in defending the bridge at Springfield; as also to the detachment under Major Lee on the Vaux Hall road. He sensibly laments the loss of that valuable officer, Capt. Lieut. Thompson, of the artillery. The General recommends the conduct of Colonel Dayton's regiment at the pass of Connecticut Farms, and Colonel Shreve's in covering the retreat from Springfield; as also the behaviour of Capt. Davis's detachment, in the afternoon. He cannot avoid expressing his satisfaction at the eagerness and alertness manifested by those corps which were not called to action.

The conduct of the militia was particularly pleasing to him, especially in the spirited manner by which they pressed the enemy on their retreat.

Last Friday sennight the enemy came out in force from Elizabeth Town Point, in two columns, commanded by General Knyphausen. Our people were early apprized of their intentions, and took measures accordingly. They advanced with rapidity to Connecticut Farms, where part of the Jersey brigade, with some militia, began to skirmish with their advance parties; but the enemy's superiority in numbers obliged our people to retreat to Springfield, where taking a favourable position, and being joined by General Stark's brigade, they determined to dispute a defile with them which they had to cross, which they heroically did, and repulsed them several times with great loss; but the column on the Vaux-Hall road advancing fast on our left flank, a retreat became indispensable, and they possessed themselves of Springfield, our army retreating to the Short Hills, where it was determined to give them the second addition, but from the specimen they had of our prowess at Springfield, old Knyp shewed no inclination of advancing farther, but savage like, contented himself with burning that beautiful village; and under cover of the flames and smoke, endeavoured to steal a retreat; but our people were so vigilant that they could not effect it unnoticed, when we pushed their rear hard, and killed a number of them, some of which they carried off on their field pieces, which were well loaded with dead carcases when they arrived at town.—Had Mr. Knyphausen's temerity prompted him to advance to the Short-Hills, we query if he would ever have led on another division of German boors to accomplish his satanic designs again.

The inhabitants of Elizabeth Town inform us, that they counted eighteen wagon load of dead and wounded, many of the former laid in the bottom of the wagons and the latter upon them.

Our loss on this occasion was trifling, considering the heavy fire they sustained from their musquetry and artillery. Col. Angell's regiment of Rhode-Islanders behaved to a charm, and suffered near as much as the whole army besides.

We took a few prisoners, and several deserters left them previous to their leaving the state.

On Saturday last a man was taken up in Bergen county with upwards of 40,000 counterfeit continental dollar bills. He is safely lodged in Morris Town gaol, and we hope we shall soon hear of his exaltation.

We are informed, that on the night of the 21st ult. a party of the New Levies from Staten-Island released, and took with them, all the persons, eight in number, who were in confinement in the gaol of Sussex county. In a few hours thereafter, four of the prisoners returned; among those who went off was Robert Maxwell, under sentence of death for burglary: He had been twice respited, and a day or two previous to this period, his Excellency the Governor had issued an order for the further suspension of the execution of the culprit to the 7th of September next.—The militia acted with spirit, but were unsuccessful, on this occasion.

While the enemy lay at Elizabeth Town Point, a Lieutenant Sherlock,¹ of the 43d regiment, and five men were made prisoners by a small patrol of ours. The Lieutenant and his party was also a patrol, but instead of attending to his duty, was taken with his party robbing a hen-roost, and the fowls taken in his hands. We did not send him to the whipping-post, although he richly deserved it. This may be depended on as a fact, and the culprit originals seen in the hands of our Commissary of prisoners.—Seldom does British merit shine with greater lustre.

On Wednesday sennight died, that Patriot and terror to the abettors of tyranny, Captain Nathaniel Fitzrandolph, of Woodbridge, of a wound he received the preceding Friday in pursuing the enemy on their retreat from Springfield. The ball entered his left arm, below the shoulder, penetrated his body, and came out at the right breast. It may justly be said of him, that he was a kind and tender husband, an indulgent parent, a worthy citizen, a sincere friend, a brave and valiant soldier, possessed of honour and humanity, as acknowledged by his enemies. During this contest he has been twice wounded before the fatal one which terminated his life; and twice a prisoner, and was confined in the provost of New-York for upwards of two years. PHILADELPHIA.

Extract of a letter from General Washington, dated Whippany, June 25, 1780.

THE conduct of the enemy giving us reason to suspect a design against West-Point, on the 21st the army, except two brigades and the horse, (left under the command of General Greene to cover the country and our stores) was put in motion to proceed slowly towards Pompton. On the 22d it arrived at Rockaway bridge, about 11 miles from Morristown. The day following, the enemy moved in force from Elizabeth-Town towards Springfield. They were opposed with great conduct and spirit by Major Generals Greene and Dickenson, with the continental troops and such of the militia as were assembled: But with their superiority in numbers, they of course gained Springfield. Having burnt the village, they retired the same day to their former position. In the night they abandoned it, crossed over to Staten-Island, and took up their bridge. I beg leave to refer Congress to General Greene's Report for particulars.

The enemy have not made their incursions into this state without loss. Ours has been small. The militia deserve every thing that can be said on both occasions. They flew to arms universally, and acted with a spirit equal to anything I have seen in the course of the war.

The enclosed REPORT from Major-General Greene is as follows:

Springfield, June 24, 1780.

SIR,

I HAVE been too busily employed, until the present moment, to lay before your Excellency the transactions of yesterday.

The enemy advanced from Elizabeth-Town about five in the morning, said to be about 5000 infantry, with a large body of cavalry, and 15 or 20 pieces of artillery. Their march was rapid and compact. They moved in two columns, one on the main road leading to Springfield, the other on the Vauxhall road. Major Lee with the horse and pickets opposed the right column, and Col. Dayton with his regiment the left, and both gave as much opposition as could have been expected from so small a force. Our troops were so extended, to guard the different roads leading to the several passes over the mountain, that I had scarcely time to collect them at Springfield, and make the necessary dispositions before the enemy appeared before the town; when a cannonade commenced between their advance and our artillery, posted for the defence of the bridge. The enemy continued manœuvring in our front for upwards of two hours, which induced me to believe they were attempting to gain our flanks. My force was small, and from the direction of the roads, my situation was critical. I disposed of the troops in the best manner I could, to guard our flanks, secure a retreat, and oppose the advance of their columns. Col. Angell with his regiment, and several small detachments, and one piece of artillery, was posted to secure the bridge in front of the town; Col. Shreve's regiment was drawn up at the second bridge, to cover the retreat of those posted at the first; Major Lee with his dragoons and the pickets, commanded by Capt. Walker, was posted at Little's bridge, on the Vauxhall road; and Col. Ogden was detached to support him. The remainder of General Maxwell's and Stark's brigades were drawn up on the high grounds at the mill. The militia were on the flanks. Those under the command of General Dickenson made a spirited attack upon one of the enemy's flanking parties, but his force was too small to push the advantage he had gained.

While the enemy were making demonstrations to their left, their right column advanced on Major Lee. The bridge was disputed with great obstinency, and the enemy must have received very considerable injury; but by fording the river, and gaining the point of the hill, they obliged the Major with his party to give up the pass. At this instant of time, their left column began the attack on Col. Angell; the action was severe, and lasted about forty minutes, when superior numbers overcame obstinate bravery, and forced our troops to retire over the second bridge, there the enemy were warmly received by Col. Shreve's regiment, but as they advanced in great force, with a large train of artillery, he had orders to join the brigade.

As the enemy continued to press our left on the Vauxhall road, which led directly into our rear, and would have given them the most important pass; and finding our front too extensive to be effectually secured by so small a body of troops, I thought it most advisable to take post upon the first range of hills in the rear of Bryant's tavern, where the roads are brought so near to a point, that succour might readily be given from one to the other. This enabled me to detach

Col. Webb's regiment, commanded by Lieut. Col. Huntington, and Col. Jackson's regiment with one piece of artillery, which entirely checked the advance of the enemy on our left and secured that pass.

Being thus advantageously posted, I was in hopes the enemy would have attempted to gain the heights, but discovering no disposition in them for attacking us, and seeing them begin to fire the houses in town, detachments were ordered out on every quarter, to prevent their burning buildings not immediately under the command of their cannon and musketry. In a few minutes they had set fire to almost every house in town, and began their retreat. Capt. Davis with a detachment of 120 men, several smaller parties, with a large body of militia, fell upon their rear and flanks, and kept up a continual fire upon them, until they entered Elizabeth-Town, which place they reached about sun-set—Stark's brigade was immediately put in motion, on the first appearance of a retreat, which was so precipitate that they were not able to overtake them.

The enemy continued at Elizabeth-Town Point until twelve o'clock at night, and then began to cross their troops to Staten-Island; by six this morning they had totally evacuated the Point and removed their bridge. Major Lee fell in with their rear guard, but they were so covered by their works, that little or no injury could be done them. He made some refugees prisoners, and took some tories which they abandoned to expedite their retreat.

I have the pleasure to inform your Excellency, that the troops who were engaged, behaved with great coolness and intrepidity, and the whole of them discovered an impatience to be brought into action. The good order and discipline which they exhibited in all their movements do them the highest honour. The artillery under the command of Lieut. Col. Forest was well served. I have only to regret the loss of Capt. Lt. Thompson, who fell at the side of his piece by a cannon ball.

It is impossible to fix with certainty the enemy's loss, but as there was much close firing, and our troops advantageously posted, they must have suffered very considerably.

I herewith enclose your Excellency a return of our killed, wounded and missing, which I am happy to find is much less than I had reason to expect from the heavy fire they sustained.

I am at a loss to determine what was the object of the enemy's expedition: If it was to injure the troops under my command, or to penetrate further into the country, they were frustrated. If the destruction of this place, it was a disgraceful one. I lament that our force was too small to save the town from ruin. I wish every American could have been a spectator, they would have felt for the sufferers, and joined to revenge the injury.

I cannot close this letter without acknowledging the particular services of Lieut. Col. Barber, who acted as Dep. Adj. General, and distinguished himself by his activity in assisting to make the necessary dispositions.

I have the honour to be, &c.

N. GREENE,
Major-General.

There were a number of prisoners made, but as they went on to Morris I had no return of them.

His Excellency General Washington.

TRENTON, JULY 5.

Head-Quarters, June 26, 1780.

THE Commander in Chief requests General Greene and all the officers and men under his command, to accept his warmest thanks for the good conduct and gallantry displayed in opposing the enemy in their advance to Springfield the 23d instant. The regiment of Col. Angell, from its situation had an opportunity of more particularly distinguishing itself, and is entitled to particular notice.

“The General has observed with the highest satisfaction that the behaviour of the troops upon every late occasion, has exhibited signal proofs how much may be expected from their valour, improved as it now is by discipline, and affords the happiest presage of success in our future operations.”

Since our last, returned to this place, Major-General DICKERSON.¹—The enemy having evacuated the state, the General, at the request of his Excellency Commander in Chief, marched the militia to Elizabeth-Town, and destroyed those works which the enemy had erected at and near the old Point;—which service being performed, he dismissed them with great reputation.

We have the pleasure to inform the Publick, that the loss sustained by the militia, in the two late excursions of the enemy into this state, does not exceed ten killed, forty wounded, and ten prisoners.

The rapidity of General Knyphausen’s last movement, with his incendiaries, to Springfield, could only be equalled by his precipitate retreat;—short as his stay was in the country, the alarm was general, and the whole body of militia in motion; two days would have given us a prodigious force.

We hear from the best authority, that in future no stores will be suffered to remain at this post.

Extract of a letter from Philadelphia, June 28, 1780.

I am favoured with your letter of yesterday morning, informing me of the departure of the enemy from Jersey. So far as it relieves our brave countrymen from immediate invasion I congratulate you and them on the event; and if we are in condition to foil them in an attempt on West-Point, it may be useful to the affairs of the United States.

“Accounts from the southward exhibit a better view of our affairs in the Carolinas than appeared last week. The militia of North-Carolina seem to put on a good countenance. Lord Cornwallis it is said has turned towards Camden in South-Carolina, and will probably have occasion to seek his own safety rather than make farther approaches northward. A gentleman (a Mr. Will, I believe of this town) is arrived here, and, I am told, says he had charge of some waggons with state-papers not far from Col. Blewford's party at the time he was attacked.— Mr. Will escaped with his charge, and says he has seen Col. Blewford since his disaster, who told him that though he lost his waggons and stores, he does not miss above 80 men, which leaves the loss not so heavy as the enemy relate it. It is said Gen. Caswell has got together about 3000 N. Carolina militia; that 2500 Virginians have marched, and more are preparing. The Maryland line are entire and a body of fine troops: So that with the remains of the horse and other corps from the southward, Gen. Gates will soon have a formidable force. The Virginia legislature are reconsidering the sceme of finance of the 18th March, and it is tho't will adopt it nem. con. The Maryland legislature have met again on the subject, and 'tis expected they will accede also. This seems to be the only chance we have of regaining vigour in our publick affairs.

“This day arrived Mr. Beckers, Capt. of marines of the Revolution. She sailed from Martinique the 4th June, made our capes the 18th, but a gust prevented her getting in that evening; next morning she found a frigate near her to windward, which obliged her to push to the southward, and at length to take her chance of an inlet on the coast of Virginia, a little northward of the cape Charles, where she beat over a shoal, and at length stuck fast, but made no water. On Thursday when Capt. Beckers left her she was still staunch, and in a fair way to get off the next tide.

“Capt. Beckers mentions two actions at sea between the French and British fleets the 17th and 19th of May, the latter very severe, in which six capital ships of the British were much shattered, and got into St. Lucia, the rest to Barbados; that by information from St. Lucia either two or four of these ships were condemned as unfit for farther service: That the French ships were not so much injured, all being again fitted save one, which was dismantled. That Count de Guichen's son was killed; and it was said Admiral Rowley was killed: That a Spanish frigate arrived about the 1st of June with advice that 12 Spanish ships of the line, with the usual &c. would join the French fleet in a few days from the Canaries. This fleet was left at the Canaries by a sloop which arrived here, on Saturday, having sailed with them from Cadiz the 26th of April. Capt. Beckers seems clear in his account, and says, respecting the damage to the British ships, that besides the information they had at Martinique by passengers from St. Lucia, 20 of the seamen now on board the Revolution are of those who have made their escape from those damaged ships."

Extract of a letter from Fairfield, dated June 16.

A gentleman this moment has come off Long-Island, and brings account that the enemy, in their late manoeuvre into the Jerseys, have met with a repulse, and their loss sustained is 150 men killed, 3 or 400 wounded—General Stirling is dead since the action, belonging to the British army—nothing more transacted."

 Every endeavour has been used to exaggerate the loss of the King's Troops, to represent it as considerable, and conceal that of the rebels in this Jersey affair. We are assured from an authority which never misled us, that their militia gentry in particular, on the excursion, were uncommonly chastised, and that in one of the skirmishes those of Essex county alone were corrected to the amount of 114 killed, wounded, and missing, The Newark adventurers too were copiously phlebotomized, many of the republican families in East Jersey have lost their daddies and brother Jonathans, whilst others are smarting and groaning under the wounds received from the animated fire which drove them to their recesses and defiles—We have much pleasure in declaring that General Stirling is in a fair way of recovery.—The Royal Gazette, No. 393, July 5, 1780.

To his Excellency Lieutenant General Knyphausen, Commander of a detachment of the British army, in the late invasion of New-Jersey.

S I R,

AS a man, a gentleman and a soldier, I presume that a right of addressing you, when it is done in truth and decency, cannot be denied me, consistent with the sufferages of all nations, however you may differ from me in point of honorary rank, or superior authority.—By the former we are entitled to expect the greatest propriety in all your proceedings—by the latter, you are certainly accountable in some measure, for the conduct of every person acting under your influence and that authority.—Your army is either well disciplined or it is not—You either command troops who are accustomed to implicit obedience, or by a want of attention to your duty and a neglect of every essential that constitutes the character of a soldier, you have suffered a veteran army, committed to your care, to sink into a vast croud of lawless banditti.—The last you will not—you cannot admit.—I shall therefore consider you in this address as the head of a well disciplined army, from whom every movement as necessarily flows, as the blood from the human heart.

You may perhaps, notwithstanding all this, at first be surprised at the freedom of this public address from a stranger, whom you have honoured with the appellation of Rebel—As some apology however, I beg leave to inform you, that I am just returned from tracing that horrid path which you have so lately stamped with the indelible characters of relentless fury, and the most timed devastation.—These, not the concomitants of a soldier (an honourable character I greatly respect) but of a powerful executioner of royal malice, detested by every friend of mankind.

The funeral of one of the most amiable woman, whose whole life, had breathed nothing but benevolence and good will to every human creature, for a while suspended my astonishment and engaged my attention.—I thought myself greatly honoured, by paying her those last rights of friendship and humanity which you most cruelly refused her, tho' she fell the victim of your heroism and became the principle trophy of your pompous invasion.

Your Excellency cannot be ignorant, that the wife of the Revd. Mr. James Caldwell, is the worthy lady to whom I refer.—I think her name can never be forgotten by you, but must be remembered, with inexpiable anguish and misery, in the last agonies of your expiring nature.—I acknowledge Mr. Caldwell was your enemy—he was so, candidly, openly and uniformly—as such you had a right to meet him in the field, and to have opposed him valiantly in arms; but suffer me to ask your Excellency, did it become the dignified character of a soldier, when disappointed in every other malevolent attempt, to descend to the brutal alternative of assassination.—Assassination—not of a man, who might possibly, in the worst of circumstances, have defended himself; but of a sweet, placed, innocent lady, whose only security was a vain and delusive dependance on the humanity of a relentless foe.—Alas! for humanity! The horrid crime is perpetrated, and that by a British, disciplined soldier, under a veteran

General—purchased from a foreign country, by a British King.

In this act your Excellency has, it is true, most severely wounded this gentleman, in the tenderest part.—You have also the consolation of adding to this valiant deed, not only the depriving of nine sweet babes, of one of the most affectionate parents on earth, but you have devoted to the flames and plunder, his habitation and property, by which those dear pledges of their mutual affection, are turned out hungry and naked, to the benevolence of their friends.—I doubt not you will deny this charge—nay, I have already seen an attempt of this nature by a British officer, aggravated by the most abominable falsehood; but it is on your Excellency as the commanding officer, which I before observed, that we have a right to fix this horrid act. I confess it is not known to us, that it was perpetrated by your express order, yet it is ascertained beyond a doubt, by unexceptionable testimony, that you since knew, it was done designedly by one of your soldiers; and it has not yet appeared, that you have so much as threatened to punish the murderer.—Had you resented the horrid deed, or had she fell by accident, humanity would have dictated some respect to be shown to the corps of a lady of her invaluable character, an[d to the two] harmless infants, thereby exposed an[idst] your army. Neither of these you did.—That her [lifeless] body did not meet even with insult, is not owing to your delicacy, but to the humanity of two gentlemen not of the army. The deed is therefore your's, and your army's. And that every nation and every age may know it, the faithful page of history shall relate the transaction, and the same marble which presents her memory and perpetuates her virtues, shall so relate the story of her death, as to shew Americans in what detestation they are to hold the name of Hessian, Britain and Tory.

I am informed that you have near five hundred of Mr. Caldwell's manuscript sermons in your possession, many of which I have heard; to these he appeals, read them, consider them well; who knows but one of those rays of christian benevolence and patriotic sentiment, that breathes thro' the whole of them, may penetrate your heart, and produce that contrition of spirit and unfeigned repentance which may finally yield you a comfortable hope, which can be produced by no other earthly source whatever.

What could be expected by those daily betrayers of your confidence the Tory refugees, the very dregs of mankind, by pointing your malice against that gentleman in so particular a manner, I cannot conceive. Nothing but stupidity, blinded by malice and despair, could lead them to think that, in a dispute like this, any individual is of so much importance with us, that his destruction should essentially effect the common cause.—No, thank God, our liberties hang not on so precarious a prop. Be no longer deceived, depend upon it, that however divided about trifles and ceremonies, whenever you make the experiment, you will find us united in the grand essential point.—Look on the sands that bind the ocean; if a furious, resistless wave should remove one, another instantly takes its place, what the shore loses in one part it gains in another.—Attend and be wise.

Your Excellency has now made two expeditions in force into the heart of this county, and what have you gained that I have not mentioned; you have equally immortalized British cruelty, and the unshaken united fortitude, as well as the unparalleled bravery of a free people.—You have erased, by the most wanton destruction, not only every Temple of the living God that came within your reach, but you have deprived upwards of forty families of very valuable dwellings and other improvements, and a much greater number of their personal property, to gratify your own and your army's thirst for plunder. These things we do—we must feel; but can you be persuaded that thereby you crush our spirits? No, they rise as far superior to these feeble efforts, as your army by these means sink below the character of men and of soldiers. That you might have been convinced of the impolicy of your conduct, I sincerely wished that yourself and many of your inferior firebrands, could have beheld the wives of freemen, in the mountains, viewing their houses in flames, with heroic fortitude, with calm and ever smiling countenances, recounting their various resources for future subsistence; whilst their husbands, roused to brave enthusiasm, pressed upon you in battle, and by the quick step of your hasty retreat, more than repaid to these American heroines, the distresses of your sudden surprise. Did not your judgment desert you with your humanity, you would know that by cheapening of life, you abate the fear of death, and thereby make us more perfect soldiers. You have now felt our pulse, and does it not rise, with the more ardent flame of liberty?

A few months ago when the revolution respecting our money was to take place. I had my own fears, lest it might produce an ill-timed apathy among our people. Your disappointed and mortified politicians, as was natural, mistook this political ague for an apoplectic, and waited the fall of Charlestown, as the important crisis for producing the last struggle.—Under this frenzy they have prevailed upon you to come out. The experiment has happily removed my fears, and I believe began the cure of your madness; our misfortunes on one hand, and the cruelty of your army on the other, have raised such a spirit as ha[s] not been lately seen in this country; a spirit which will no longer tamely bear the Tories and neutrals among ourselves, no longer bear your insults with patience. I could with the gentlemen of the British army, to remember they have unguarded towns on the island of Great Britain.—The officers and refugees in your army have wives and children among us. They compliment while they insult our humanity.

Great-Britain is not without her arsenals, her yards and magazines. An English tongue, habit and manners may produce more speedy vengeance than addresses to your reason, or your honor. Remember John the Painter, who lost his house and effects at Amboy on the first landing of your army, and the destruction of the dock-yards at Portsmouth. He was a poor man, without friends, and unassisted by public council or money. I know that you have too much reason to laugh at our public appeals to Heaven hitherto, on the subject of retaliation—perhaps we now suffer deservedly for so base a profanation of sacred things.—Would to God the misery had fallen on those who are most immediately the delinquents, we should not now have had the necessity of associating in important bodies for this necessary purpose. However, you have now had your day; ours may not be far off. We have been now taught to consider our property as only of present utility, and that to secure any, all must be at the public service; the next attempt will convince you, what the whole personal strength of this country, as well as the abundance of its supplies, can accomplish.—By this time you are able to form some judgment of your fruitless invasion; set down and count the cost, and from that calculation make an estimate of what your requisitions must be to accomplish the conquest of the United States. Be honest in your information to your royal master, and convince him that neither his avarice, his vanity, nor his obstinacy, can possibly be gratified even at the expence of his three kingdoms, with the addition of his favourite Hanover into the bargain.

If it has required the loss of more than four hundred men, to make two sudden and unexpected marches of eight miles into the country, guarded by three or four hundred regular troops in addition to the natural strength of its inhabitants, and to hold this space of country ten or twelve hours at a time, what must be your force to make a final conquest of fifteen or sixteen hundred miles, and to preserve the same.—I now leave you to that hour which must produce reflections, and to those feelings which the cries of innocent blood, and the remembrance of the blackest crimes, must raise; and most sincerely wishing that I may soon meet you arm to arm.

I am your's, &c.

Mr. PRINTER,

MR. Rivington, according to his usual practice, has inserted in his Gazette, of the 29th ult. under the signature of one of my sex, the grossest falsehoods respecting what happened to Colonel Gordon near Governor Livingston's house, that ever entered into the heart of man. Almost every syllable of that publication is a most villainous lie. There was not a single musket fired from behind the Governor's house nor fields; nor was it the Colonel who was wounded that had the rose in the morning, but a Colonel Wormb, a Hessian officer, who asked leave to pick one as he was on his horse. This, Mr. Printer, you may depend on as a fact, and it is in the power both of Colonel Gordon and Colonel Wormb to confirm my words.

I am your humble servant,

CLARINDA.¹

And they cried the sword of the Lord and of Gideon.

JUDGES vii. 20.

ROUSE! my dear countrymen, rouse! the Philistians are upon you;—life liberty and every other thing in this world worth enjoying are at stake; they have both eyes put out who do not see it; a flourishing village in our vicinity within a few days reduced to ashes;—a house for God reared and built with much labor and expence totally destroyed by villains. Who can behold such desolation without some virtuous and proper resentment; and foreseeing their own turn may be approaching? For if men are grown so callous that they do not feel for others, yet there are few but what feel for themselves; and those who will not now exert themselves have scarce virtue enough to be selfish, and are unworthy of membership, or even of enjoying property in any well meaning and civilized community. Something must be done, or this part of the country is undone; and as it is no crime to see it, so it is an instance of true patriotism to warn you of it. Were we now at the present juncture of affairs to hold our peace, and not cry the sword of the Lord and Gideon, the sword of the Lord and Washington the very stones might cry out. We are to look to God in a way of holy trust, fervent prayer, and use our greatest efforts. Praying to God without using the means he has appointed is a presuming upon God; using means without praying and crying to him is a denial of him; therefore what God has joined together let not man put asunder. Now is the time to be ready to give a merciless foe the warmest and most effectual reception, should they have the impudence and fool hardiness, after the repulse and loss they met with and sustained, to venture another such an excursion. Rise! Rise! to a man, and go forth on the next alarm; men of the best characters must go forth, and not leave the burthen on a few; 'tis mean, dastardly, and inequitable to refuse. Do not say we are clear from it by law, or have given something to hire a substitute; what, will you do more, when your country is on fire, and dying by your side, then what the law obliges you? The Tories come that length, and what do you more than others, more than Tories; how are you better, or deserve more praise? It can be no just excuse on such occasions, that a man is fifty or turned of fifty, when perhaps there is no part of his life from the cradle to the grave, when he could be more useful as a soldier, or better qualified to take the field. The age of sixty, nay seventy years, ought not to apologize for a man in such emergencies, so long as he is able to follow the plough, and his daily employment at home. Some who have shewed themselves very forward, or at least very talkative, in the beginning of our troubles, but have now disappeared, should come out of their lurking holes, at such times, and fly to arms; and not like apostates in religion, reflect such indignity and reproach upon the glorious cause they once seemed so warmly to espouse. Ministers especially, who are praying for the salvation of their country, and animating others from the pulpit to rush on, should no longer continue only to harrangue at the salutary distance of many miles from the scene of action and seat of danger; or as some, make their appearance, bustle, and be noisy, crowding others forward, keeping on the ground of safety themselves; but on hearing the alarm guns, snatch their arms, mingle with their respective congregations, show, by their example, how interesting and important the defence then to be made; encourage and council the men, suppress rudeness and every kind of impiety that may rise to view; and, as they have opportunity, solemnly pray to the Lord of Hosts, the God of armies, that he would guide, protect, and succeed them. This would be to act in character. Such conduct would doubtless be attended with the most salutary effects. The country would soon be a live. Men would be ashamed to sneak. The enemy thrown into the utmost panic; when, from every height, from every advantageous stand and post, there were not only the roar of musquetry, but the united cry of camp and country, church and state, clergy and laity, the sword of the Lord and Gideon, the sword of the Lord and Washington. To which let all the people say amen.

A REPUBLICAN.

—The New-Jersey Journal, Vol. II., Numb. LXXIII, July 12, 1780.

The SENTIMENTS of a LADY in NEW-JERSEY.

THE war carried on by the British nation against my native country cannot fail to excite in the human and virtuous mind sentiments very unfavourable to the authors and instruments of such a variety of complicated evils and misfortunes as we have suffered in the course of it.

The contest, begun on their part without principle, has been prosecuted without humanity. Devoid of those sentiments and that conduct which do so much honour to the civilized nations of Europe even in time of war; they have thrown off all restraint, and fully displayed in their military operations in this part of the world the true characteristics of their country—a fierce and barbarous spirit, resisting, contrary to the common rule, the ordinary effects which refinement of manners and a high degree of polish usually have on the minds of men in softening them to humanity, constitutes their real character.

Was I unconnected with America by ties of friendship or blood, was I not attached by that love of one's country which is inherent in some degree in every breast, and partakes of the nature of that instinctive affection which we bear to our parents and kindred; was I situated in a distant part of the world, unagitated by the incidents of the day, which are the more interesting the nigher we are to the scene of war, the bare recital of their unjust claims, their cruelties and their crimes would fill my soul with horror, and I should regard them not only as unprovoked aggressors, but as enemies by principle and example to mankind in general.

But as if it were not enough unjustly to spill the blood of our countrymen, to lay waste the fields, to destroy our dwellings and even the houses consecrated and set apart for the worship of the Supreme Being, they have desolated the aged and unprotected, and even waged war against our sex. Who that has heard of the burning of Charlestown in New-England,—of the wanton destruction of Norfolk and Falmouth,—of their wasting the fine improvements in the environs of Philadelphia,—of the tragical death of Miss M'Crea, torn from her house, murdered and scalped by a band of savages hired and set on by British emissaries,—of the melancholy fate of Mrs. Caldwell, put to death in her own house in the late incursion of the enemy,—and the general havock which at this moment marks their footsteps in their route through a part of this state—but would wish to avert from themselves, their kindred, their property, and their country in general, so heavy misfortunes.

These are truths sufficiently affecting to touch with pity and compassion even hearts hard as marble, and cannot fail to make a deep and lasting impression in the minds of all.

These feelings and these sentiments have been particularly manifested by the Ladies of Philadelphia in their liberal contributions of money towards rendering the situation of the soldiery of the continental army more convenient and comfortable. It is to this class of men we more immediately owe our defence and protection; they have born the weight of the war, and met danger in every quarter; and what is higher praise, they have with Roman courage and perseverance suffered the extremes of heat and cold, the attacks of hunger, and the pain of long fatiguing marches through parts before unexplored by armies, and which had scarcely ever before born the print of human feet.

It was enough for these brave men to reflect they were engaged in the best and most glorious of all causes, that of defending the rights and liberties of their country, to induce them to behave with so much resolution and fortitude. Their many sufferings so cheerfully undergone, highly merit our gratitude and sincere thanks, and claim all the assistance we can afford their distresses. If we have it not in our power to do from the double motive of religion and a love of liberty, what some Ladies of the highest rank in the Court of France every day perform from motives of religion only in the hospitals of the sick and diseased, let us animate one another to contribute from our purses in proportion to our circumstances towards the support and comfort of the brave men who are fighting and suffering for us in the field. We ought to do this if we deserve to keep the enemy from our borders, if we wish that there may not be occasion to call forth our husbands, our children, and our dearest friends, to risque their lives again in our defence. I can truly say that I have experienced the most heart-rending anxieties when my relations and friends have been called upon as free citizens to march against the enemy; and the pangs I have suffered on such occasions have made it easy for me to give credit to the account we have in the history of ancient Rome of the two matrons who died for joy, one at the gate of the city, the other at her own house, at the sight of their sons who returned in safety after the battle at the Lake of Thrasymene:—When I say this I mean only to express the feelings of a woman, my sentiments being ever in favour of that spirit which my countrymen have so often manifested when their services have been required.

PRINCETON, July 5, 1780.

Yesterday being the anniversary of the declaration of Independence, the President and Faculty of the College, with the students, the officers and soldiers of the army and militia, and other inhabitants, assembled at six o'clock, afternoon, when thirteen guns were fired; before each of which one of the following sentiments was publicly read by Major Egbert, and after it the whole company gave three cheers, in testimony of their approbation.

1. The United States of America—May they prosper and flourish to the latest ages.

2. The Congress—May that body always preserve the dignity, the integrity, and the power necessary to govern so great a republic.

3. The Kings of France and Spain, and all our allies—May they be rewarded for their friendly aid to America.

4. General Washington—May he ever vanquish the enemies of America, and live to enjoy the honours of a grateful country.

5. The army of the United States—Blessings crown their bravery, and may Providence reward, and their country never forget, their great and generous services.

6. Our brethren and countrymen in captivity—May they support their fortitude in that unhappy state, and be speedily restored to us by an equitable exchange.

7. General Lincoln and the garrison of Charles-Town—Thanks to them for their gallant defence—May they never, like General Burgoyne, experience a cruel ingratitude because they wanted success.

8. General Gates and the southern army—May Carolina, like Saratoga, see British confidence raised by undeserved success, humbled by the same leader.

9. The Liberties and Independence of America—May they be for-ever secured from the hands of oppression and tyranny.

10. The Confederation of the United States—May it be compleated upon just and lasting principles, so that no divisions may ever disturb the happy union.

11. May Virtue, the sure basis of free governments, ever be the cement and support of the American union.

12. The Governor, Assembly, and Judges of New-Jersey—May they always have that wisdom and integrity that is necessary to make us happy citizens, and this State distinguished in the confederacy.

13. May this destructive war speedily terminate in a lasting and honourable peace.

Afterwards the company adjourned to the College Hall, where a discourse was delivered by the President, in which he considered, 1. The importance and necessity of Independence at the time it was declared; 2. The events of Providence in the course of the contest; and, 3. The duty of all ranks in the present crisis. After sunset the college and town were illuminated, and the whole was concluded with the greatest good order.

TRENTON, JULY 12.

The 4th instant being the anniversary of American Independency, the same was announced in this town by a discharge of thirteen pieces of cannon at twelve o'clock. A number of the Gentlemen of the town repaired to the Thirteen Stars, where a handsome dinner was provided; after which the following toasts were drank:—

1. The United States of America.
2. Independency.
3. The Congress.
4. General Washington and the Army.
5. The Governor and State of New-Jersey.
6. The King of France.
7. The King of Spain.
8. The New-Jersey Militia.
9. A successful Campaign.
10. A speedy arrival of the French Fleet.
11. The Friends of America in Great-Britain and Ireland.
12. Doctor Franklin.
13. Paul Jones.

The whole was conducted with that cheerfulness, good order and decency, which should ever characterize the Freemen of America.

A few days ago died, of the wounds he received in nobly fighting in defence of his country, NATHANIEL FITZ-RANDOLPH, Esq. late of Woodbridge, in this state.

This Gentleman's zeal and activity, joined with the most intrepid bravery, had long rendered him obnoxious to the vindictive rage and cruelty of a British enemy, who has stained the pages of modern history with indelible marks of inhuman barbarity and savage cruelty. Twice he fell into their ruthless hands, and suffered all the tortures of long confinement in the provost-guard at New-York; from whence he had lately been delivered.

Last Friday Robert Pomeroy was executed at Burlington, pursuant to his sentence.

Five Hundred Pounds Reward.

Whoever detects the incendiary or incendiaries, or gives me information thereof, so that he or they be convicted of the fact, shall receive the above reward.

Extracts from Rebel Papers.

CHATHAM, July 12.

Congress resolved, on the 28th ult. That the principal of all loans, that have been made to these United States, shall finally be discharged; by paying the full current value of the bills when loaned, which payments shall be made in Spanish milled dollars, or the current exchange thereof in other money, at the time of payment:

That the value of the bills when loaned, shall be ascertained for the purpose abovementioned, by computing thereon a progressive rate of depreciation, commencing with the first day of September, 1777, and continuing to the eighteenth day of March, 1780, in geometrical proportion to the time, from period to period, as hereafter stated, assuming the depreciation at the several periods to be as follows viz.

On the first day of March, 1778, one dollar and three quarters of a dollar of the said bills, for one Spanish milled dollar; on the first of September, 1778, as four the former for one of the latter; on the first of March, 1779, as ten of the former for one of the latter; on the first day of September, 1779, as eighteen of the former for one of the latter; and on the eighteenth day of March, 1780, as forty of the former for one of the latter:

That the principal of all certificates that shall hereafter be taken out, until the further order of Congress, be discharged at the same rate and in the same manner as those that have been taken out since the eighteenth day of March last.

That the interest of all loan office certificates at the rate of six per cent. per annum, computed on the principal ascertained as aforesaid, shall be discharged annually, in like manner as the principal until the principal shall be paid: Provided nevertheless, that the same interest and mode of payment on certificates taken out before the first day of March, 1778, shall be continued as at present, until the principal ascertained as aforesaid, shall be ready to be discharged.

They also ordered, That the board of treasury prepare the proper tables for direction of the commissioners of the continental loan offices in the several states, in paying off the principal and interest of loans, agreeably to the foregoing resolutions.

On Friday the 16th inst. a little after sunset, six armed villains came to the house of John Chamberlain, Esq: in Windsor, Middlesex County; three of them entered the house, the other stood as guards: Putting their bayonets to his breast, they demanded his money; and after much abuse, and many threatenings they went off, taking with them about £.65 in hard, and about £.1000 in continental money, three pair of silver shoe buckles, three silver do. three pair of silver buttons, half a dozen silver tea spoons, and a variety of the family's wearing apparel.

On Wednesday sennight died, that patriot and terror to the abettors of tyranny, Captain Nathaniel Fitzrandolph, of Woodbridge, of a wound he received the preceding Friday in pursuing the enemy on their retreat from Springfield. The ball entered his left arm, below the shoulder, penetrated his body, and came out at the right breast. It may justly be said of him, that he was a kind and tender husband, an indulgent parent, a worthy citizen, a sincere friend, a brave and valiant soldier, possessed of honour and humanity, as acknowledged by his enemies. During this contest he has been twice wounded before the fatal one which terminated his life; and twice a prisoner, and was confined in the provost of New York for upwards of two years. His remains were interred on the Thursday following with the honors of war attended by a large concourse of respectable inhabitants from the neighboring townships. He has left an amiable wife and two lovely children to bewail his loss; and is much lamented by all that had the pleasure of his acquaintance.

TRENTON, JULY 19.

Letters from Camp announce the arrival of the French fleet and army at Rhode-Island, on the 10th instant. It is reported that Admiral Graves arrived at Sandy-Hook a few days ago, with six ships of the line, but brought no troops.

THIS day's Gazette completes the year. The price is fixed by the quarter at one third of a dollar, to be paid in produce, or half a dollar in gold or silver, or the current exchange thereof in continental money at the time of payment, for the ensuing year. The great expence of paper and printing renders it indispensably necessary that the cash payments be punctually made at the end of every quarter, and those who pay in produce, once a year.

Pursuant to a resolve of Congress of the 10th of May, 1780, relative to the destruction or loss of Loan-Office Certificates by accident,

The PUBLIC are hereby INFORMED,

THAT the subscriber on his return from South-Carolina to Albany, on the 23d of March last, early in the morning, at the house of Mr. Garret Hopper, in Paramus, (state of New-Jersey) was alarmed at the approach of a detachment of British troops, where-upon he saddled his horse and put his saddlebags on him, but before he had time to get his sourtout coat and pistols out of the house and ride off, a skirmish began between the enemy and some continental troops, that were at the house of said Hopper, which frightened the horse, who broke his bridle, and ran off with the saddle and saddlebags. The subscriber got his horse and saddle again the same day, but did not see his saddlebags until three or four days after, which were cut open and every thing taken out of them, among the rest were the twelve following loan-office certificates, viz. No. 1542, 1543, 1544, 1545, 1546, 1547, 1548, 1549, for 500 dollars each, dated November 19th, 1778, payable to Josiah Crane.

After the rebels had plundered the inhabitants of Staten-Island, in their descent last January, Lord Stirling (who commanded the invaders) issued an order directed to Parson Caldwell, for the collecting and restoring¹ all the property to the several owners; How far this has been complied with, may appear on perusal of the following copy of an original epistle in the printer's hands, from his Lordship's Deputy Quarter-Master-General, Benjamin Brown, to the immaculate Commissary James Caldwell, dated Springfield, Feb. 1, 1780.

Springfield, February 1, 1780.

Dear Sir,

I WAS at Elizabeth-Town this morning, and found a good many articles of the Staten Island plunder in Mr. Shutes house. Mr. Ben. Williamson says he cannot procure sleighs sufficient to take it to Morris Town.—There are some articles, such as matrasses and blankets, which I sewed up in a blanket for our family's use; Mr. Ben. Williamson will send two sleigh loads of what are there, to-morrow: Major Williamson wrote me that there were some goods lodged at Springfield, if you know where they are, I wish you would send them to Morris-Town, directed to me: Such things as you may think, at Elizabeth Town, unnecessary to send to Morris, I could wish you to dispose of, and transmit the accounts with the sales to me, as I am to be accounted for all of them. I wish you would send a sleigh or two to Elizabeth Town, to fetch up what goods that may be worth sending, as soon as possible, so that the things may be appraised and settled.

I am, your obedient servant,

BENJAMIN BROWN, D. Q. M. G.

On Monday evening last, five loyal Refugees under the command of Lieut. Eben. Ward, went from this city in a small boat to the Jersey shore, when they proceeded to the town of Newark, and made prisoners Major Joseph Hayse, Thomas Canfield, (a justice of the peace, and commissioner for selling the estates of the Loyalists that have taken protection within the British lines) Job Canfield and Zophar Lyon, all atrocious rebels.—These four prisoners were brought to town yesterday morning, and safely lodged in the sugar house.

New-York, July 22.

In the account of the Rebels brought to town this week from Newark, the Reader is desired to substitute the name of "Samuel Hayse," instead of "Joseph Hayse," who is a Commissioner for selling of TORIES estates, and it is remarkable, that as there are only three of these Commissioners for the county of Essex; they are all three now in salva custodia in this city.

Yesterday morning about nine o'clock, Generals Wayne and Irwin, with the 1st and 2d Pennsylvania brigades of infantry, Colonel Moyland's cavalry, and Proctor's artillery, the flower of Washington's army, consisting of about 1800 troops, with 6 six pounders, and one howitz, appeared in view of Col. Cuyler's refugee post, on the Jersey shore, which was then commanded by Captain Thomas Ward; about 10 o'clock they advanced with their cannon, within 160 yards of the Refugee works, and commenced a tremendous cannonade which lasted till half past 11; they attempted to storm the abbatis, but were repulsed with the loss of about 90 killed and wounded among which are five officers. The loss of the Refugees is 4 killed, and 8 slightly wounded; no veterans could have behaved better on this occasion than these few Loyalists. And his Excellency the Commander in Chief, has expressed his thanks and approbation to this LOYAL BAND, for their spirited and gallant behaviour.

From the New-Jersey Journal, dated July 12.

Mr. RIVINGTON according to his usual practice has inserted in his Gazette, of the 29th ult. under the signature of one of my sex, the grossest falsehoods respecting what happened to Col. Gordon, near Governor Livingston's house, that ever entered into the heart of man. Almost every syllable of that publication is a most villainous lie. There was not a single musket fired from behind the Governor's house nor field's, nor was it the Colonel that was wounded who had the rose in the morning, but a Colonel Wormb, an Hessian Officer, who asked leave to pick one as he was on his horse. This Mr. Printer, you may depend on a fact, and it is in the power both of Colonel Gordon and Col. Wormb to confirm my words.

I am your humble servant,

CLARINDA.

Mr. Rivington presents his most respectful compliments to Clarinda, and assures her he is perfectly innocent of the charge respecting the Rose, and all other imputations in the above address.—He has not printed or published directly nor indirectly, a single title upon the subject, and he takes leave to add that no Lady will from his performances, ever meet with injury or disgust.

CARD to Mr. RIVINGTON,

ROSALINDA presents her compliments to Mr. Rivington, regretting that the name of one of the sex should be connected with terms, so very unlike those used by the distinguished part of the Fair! However his zeal and loyalty may urge him through mistake, to be poetical in his prose productions occasionally the world at large must quit him, of having merited the unguarded attack of the Clarinda of Chatham, he having been silent of late in what regards La petite Guerre; and wholly occupied by the tremendous manoeuvres of the grand fleurs of Spain, France, and Holland, the former of which he has given a good account of uncontradicted, and 'tis hoped, God willing, will soon give a further good account of the Ally next in rotation for flagelation. Rosalinda is informed that the British Officer refused the honour of the Rose by Clarinda, is s[o] very grateful for the favour that he will not relinquish his right to it, and for the first time, and as 'tis said (he hopes the last time in his life) he brags of, the Lady's Favour!—Received on horse back, in like manner as the gallant Hessian Partizan honored by the signmanual of the fair Clarinda! it is whispered that on return from the excursion, notwithstanding he wore the sweet present next his left breast, the afternoon he received an other, in the vicinity of Mr. William L — — — 's¹ house, tho' also very honourable, not near so agreeable as that he had the pleasure to receive at 4 o'clock that morning!

—The Royal Gazette, No. 398, July 22, 1780.

NEW-YORK, July 24.

The following is the Names of the brave Refugees that were killed and wounded at Col. Cuyler's Refugee Post, near Fort Lee, about 8 Miles from New-York, on Hudson's River, on Friday the 21st inst. as mentioned in the preceding Page, viz. Thomas Philips, of the Artillery, John M'Murdy, with another Man, and a Negro, killed.

Lieutenants George and Absolam Bull, Alexander Sharp, John and Ezekeal Fealy, and John Mullan, wounded.

The principal Officers on the Attack were Colonels Moiland, Stewart, Hays, Proctor, and the Majors Lee and More.

Thus the chosen Band of Washington's Army were repulsed by a few determined Loyalists: and we have Reason to believe the Loss of the Rebels much greater than has yet been ascertained—and to add more to the Spirit of the Refugees, a Party, under the Command of the brave Captain Ward, pursued the Rear of the retreating Army upwards of 4 Miles, retook 20 Head of Cattle that were carried off from the well affected Neighbours, killed one Rebel, and made Prisoner of General Wain's Servant, and another.

The following Approbation was signified to Col. Cuyler by the Adjutant-General;

SIR, Head-Quarters, July 21, 1780.

THE Commander in Chief admiring the Gallantry of the Refugees, who in such small Numbers defended their Post against so very considerable a Corps, and withstood both their Cannonade and Assault: desires his very particular Acknowledgement of their Merit may be testified to them.

His Excellency requests you will give in a Return of the Numbers present at this spirited Defence, that he may give Directions for uniform Cloathing and Hats being given them from the Inspector General's Office.

In future your Requisition of Ammunition will be valid with the Ordnance.

I have the Honour to be,

Sir, your most obedient,
and most humble Servant,

JOHN ANDRE, D. A. G.

Mr. Gaine,

HOWEVER savage the Idea, and strange to tell, it is not the less true that during the Attack the Rebels made on the Refugees on Friday, they stripped all their killed except a Few that lay near the Works, as naked as they came into the World, and threw 10 or 12 of the Bodies down the Rocks towards the River, nor did they leave one wounded Man but such as were quite dead.

—The New-Jersey Journal, Vol. II., Numb. LXXV, July 26, 1780.

To the PRINTER of the NEW-JERSEY GAZETTE.

SIR,

I FIND that some notice has been taken in your paper of the barbarous murder of Mrs. Caldwell, near Elizabeth-Town, by the British soldiers. This is not the first nor a singular instance of their brutality; yet from several circumstances it is no wonder that it drew the attention of the public: She was an amiable woman—the wife of a clergyman—the mother of nine young children—and in her disposition one of the most meek and inoffensive persons in the country. The murder was committed not only without immediate provocation, but by a piece of deliberate and refined malice; it was projected and executed to be revenged on the husband for espousing the cause of his country: I add, that the malice was pure as well as refined, for there was no policy in the measure at all. Had they carried his wife off a prisoner and kept her in their hands, it might have been expected that this would prove a restraint upon his activity against them, but to put her to death was an act of unmixed malignity, for all the effect it could be supposed to have was to kindle resentment in his breast. I hope however it will not be in one breast only that this resentment will be kindled, but that the whole country, holding in detestation this savage barbarity, will exert themselves with unremitting vigour to expel the murderers from our coast. Sometimes, as Montesquieu observes, a single instance of cruelty that is somewhat remarkable sets fire to the indignation of a people which had been long ripening, tho' silently, under repeated acts of oppression. Thus Lucretia's misfortune occasioned the expulsion of the Tarquins from Rome, and the still more melancholy fate of Virginia, killed by her own father to save her from the lust of Appius one of the Decemvirs, occasioned the deposition of that whole body of tyrants. These were both ladies; and it would seem that among a brave and free people virtue and honour are kindled into a fiercer rage by an injury done to one of the weaker sex than to a man, be the circumstances in other respects ever so striking.

I am for my own part, Mr. Printer, a theoretical or speculative whig; that is to say, I embraced that cause more from principle than from passion; more from a deliberate judgment on the rights of mankind and the future benefit to the public in general that must arise from independence, than from any oppression I had myself suffered before, or any good I expected to receive after the successful issue of the contest: Therefore I have been accustomed to make many general, political, and moral observations on the state and conduct of the quarrel from time to time. Among others, as soon as I clearly perceived that the public mind was on the side of liberty, that the great body of the people, as General Burgoyne expresses it, was with the Congress in principle and in zeal, I concluded that whatever vicissitudes there might be in the military operations, the final settlement must be in favour of America. The nature of things is on her side. All who have extensive views of the course of human affairs, and the causes of political revolutions, must be of that opinion. Accordingly it is said that the celebrated historian, Dr. Robertson, observed very early to some of the great men in office, that if they did not suppress this rebellion the first year, they never would be able to effect it.

The final success of America then appeared to me to be certain, whatever measures her enemies had pursued; but by the peculiar order of Divine Providence Lord

North, or whoever had the supreme direction of affairs in England, in every step they took contributed to ascertain, promote, and accelerate the separation. We have now done talking and writing about the Acts of Parliament passed at the first appearance of American resistance, but posterity will wonder at them in two respects:

1. At the cruelty; and, 2. At the ill policy that appears in them.

1. They will wonder that a body of men representing a great nation should be found so unfeeling and barbarous as to pass what the people here very justly called the murder act. This act ordained even before the separation, that persons charged with murdering Americans, then their subjects, should not be tried in that country, but brought over to England, that is to say, as every body understood it, should not be punished but rewarded. Who did not perceive at one glance that a candid trial in such cases was not to be expected, and indeed that in most cases of the kind any trial at all was wholly impossible. Could this barbarity be exceeded? Yes: It was exceeded by that act which ordered Americans taken at sea, to be turned before the mast, and obliged to kill their relations and friends. Some of the English writers have told us that they had a right to put us all to death, and therefore to inflict this punishment which was less than death; on which I shall only say, what hearts must these persons have who do not perceive that this was fifty times worse than any death they could inflict. Acts of cruelty in the field committed by single ruffians vanish in a manner entirely in the eye of reason when compared with acts of a numerous assembly, which are intended to have a general and perpetual operation, which must be thrice gravely read before they are passed, and then deliberately assented to, i. e. approved and enforced by a most gracious sovereign. Well, is there anything still worse than this, or more wonderful behind? Yes: That in the King's speeches from the throne, and in the preambles to the Acts of Parliament you will find them extolling their own lenity even when every act they passed filled this whole continent with resentment and horror. Posterity will wonder at all this, but circumstanced as we are we have no reason to be surprized that mercenary soldiers should breathe the spirit of him who employs them, or execute the cruel purposes of the Parliament which pays them.

2. It will also be matter of wonder in future times that they should imagine barbarity was the way either to reconcile or to subdue a numerous and brave people, inhabiting so extensive and so distant a country. Probably somebody will say with astonishment, If there were no politicians, were there also no philosophers in England at that time? Was there nobody that understood human nature? Was there nobody acquainted with the history of their own or other countries? Did persecution ever extinguish a religious sect? or did cruelty ever establish a secure and permanent authority? Suffer me to put my countrymen in mind of what happened in the close of the year 1776. When General Washington's army melted away almost to nothing by the expiration of the times of the soldiers enlistments, the English army over ran a great part of New-Jersey, and took up their posts in a line from Hudson's to Delaware river. From the suddenness of the interruption the people were confounded, and as was natural enough, their own country being possessed by the enemy, there were not wanting many who thought the cause was hopeless. If in these circumstances the English had behaved with gentleness or with justice; if they had protected every person in his property, and made no enquiry what part any man had formerly acted, it seems probable to me that most of those who could not remove their property and effects, would have remained very quiet for that season. I am far from thinking that this would have gained their cause itself, yet would it have made their interest stronger by much in the country than ever it has been since. But happily for the general good, they were vain enough to think that, as some of them expressed it, the whole affair would be over in two or three weeks, and therefore began to act as conquerors, giving us a fair earnest of what they would do if ever they should be really so. They oppressed the country in general by the most arbitrary orders and exactions, and treated every friend of liberty with insult, injustice, and cruelty, as may be seen in the publication by Congress of that time from the most authentic testimonies. If any expostulated, some of the proud underlings who traiterously assisted in plundering and peeling their neighbours would say, Remember your former conduct,—whigs must expect to suffer,—you was out a tory-hunting but the other day.

What was the consequence? The body of the people no longer able to bear to see their effects plundered by two or three marauding soldiers, sometimes by a single horseman, twenty miles from their quarters, betook themselves to arms; and the militia, with very little assistance from the continental army, drove them from all their other posts, and confined them to Brunswick and Amboy. This resolution was taken and began to be executed even before the taking of the Hessians at Trenton, and the battle of Princeton. These happy and glorious events providentially occurring, gave great spirit to the country, and brought the efforts of the voluntary insurgents under the direction of the Commander in Chief. But I must always attribute the extraordinary efforts of the New-Jersey militia ever since that time, which have been confessed and applauded by every state on the continent, in a great measure to the barbarity of the English while they possessed a great part of their country. I would not willingly derogate from the valour of my countrymen, which was spoken of with so much honour last war, but I am confident none of them will deny that a just indignation against false-hearted traiters and unfeeling ravagers added strength to their arm, and made their exertions at once more vigorous and more virtuous. What was the reason that when General Washington called for the militia in November 1776, to assist in stopping the enemy's inroad into the country the time was thought too short, and nothing effectual was done? But when he called for assistance in the June following, to hinder them from penetrating the country a second time, within twenty-four hours after firing the beacons there assembled at Princeton alone upwards of 5000 men. We owed that to Gen. Howe's possessing Princeton twenty-six days in December, 1776; and many may remember it was usual to say in the spring, 1777, that where Congress had made one whig, Gen. Howe had made ten.

The mention of that gentleman's name leads me to introduce a fact which has always appeared to me the most complete and undeniable proof, and indeed superior to every other of the vindictive and implacable spirit by which our enemies are actuated. We are assured, and I believe upon good evidence, that Gen. Howe is now in disgrace at the Court of Britain, and one of the charges against him is his too great lenity in his treatment of the Americans. Hear, O ye inhabitants of New-Jersey, will you not do justice even to an enemy, and vindicate him from so groundless an aspersion? Let your empty houses and plundered country tell the lenity of General Howe—let the prisons of New-York, and the vast numbers starved with hunger or suffocated with stench, tell the lenity of General Howe—let the gastly spectres who by a miracle escaped death in their hands, and passed through this country after their exchange, tell the lenity of General Howe. I speak of things universally known, and therefore shall not enlarge.—But what must be the hearts of that King and Ministry who were not satisfied with the horrible carnage.

I intended to have concluded this letter by a cool and critical examination of an assertion of several of the writers in Rivington's and other New-York papers; for the King of Great-Britain has officers who can write as well as fight, perhaps better. The assertion I mean is, That humanity is the characteristick of the English nation. But having already taken up too much room in your paper, I defer it to another opportunity.

And am, Sir, &c.

ARISTIDES.

CHATHAM, July 19.

On Monday the 10th inst. Mons. de Ternay arrived at Newport, Rhode-Island, with a very formidable fleet of ships and a large body of land forces, sent to the relief of these United States by his Most Christian Majesty, with whose assistance we hope very soon to extirpate from our territories those invaders of our rights, the apostate Britons.

Last Thursday Thomas Graves, Rear Admiral of the Blue, arrived at Sandy-Hook from England, with five ships of the line. We are told they are very badly manned.

On Sunday last three of the enemy's dragoons swam their horses, with their accoutrements, from Staten-Island, and came over to our people at Elizabeth-Town.

We are informed that the spirit of desertion is very prevalent among the enemy. No less than 15 of their light horsemen deserted in a body on the 6th instant, with their horses, arms, and accoutrements; six of them came into Fredericksburgh, and nine to Gen. Howe's head-quarters; and that scarcely a day elapses without more or less coming off to some of our posts on the east side of Hudson's river.

Night before last five or six of the refugees came over to Newark and carried off Major Hayes, Justice Canfield and son, and Zophar Lyon.

PHILADELPHIA, July 19.

Extract of a letter from Freehold (New-Jersey) dated July 17, 1780.

“There remains no longer a doubt about the six large ships that my former letter mentioned to have come to off Long-Island on this day afternoon—they are Admiral Graves’ fleet; I presume some of them 80 guns, none under 60. I rode down to Shrewsbury yesterday, but the weather was too foggy to make any critical observations. I observe that Arbuthnot had augmented Graves’ fleet to 13 ships, ten of them appear to be 60 and upwards, three of them large frigates. Arbuthnot’s ship and others form the west line, immediately to cover the entrance into Sandy-Hook.

“From my own observation, and variety of accounts, I am of opinion that the British now have 18 ships of 40 guns and upwards at New-York, besides small frigates, sloops, cutters, &c. Accounts from New-York, on Saturday, say, Admiral Graves has fallen in with Admiral Ternay, and that Graves had lost a 74 gun ship sunk; that Admiral Ternay had arrived at Rhode-Island in a shattered condition; that they were exerting themselves amazingly at New-York to complete their complement of men on board their ships of war. Every volunteer that will enter on board for this exigency shall be discharged from all duty by land or sea for three years.”

TRENTON, JULY 26.

We hear that on Friday morning last the Pennsylvania line, under the command of General Wayne, made an unsuccessful attack against a block-house the enemy erected some time ago at Closter, in Bergen county. Our failure it is said was owing to the lightness of our artillery, and the enemy's metal being much heavier than was expected. Our troops however recovered several hundred head of quadrupeds, consisting of horses, horned cattle, sheep, and hogs, which the banditti that infest that neighbourhood had plundered from the inhabitants. Our loss on this occasion is said to be several killed and wounded.

The French armament which arrived at Rhode-Island the 12th instant, is said to consist of 8 ships of the line, 5 frigates, 2 bomb-ketches, and about 100 transports with upwards of 5000 troops. M. le Count de Rochambeau commands the French troops, and M. le Chevalier de Ternay that of the fleet.

We learn that a large body of the militia of the state of New-York will shortly be ordered out, and that His Excellency Governor Clinton will command them in person.

We also hear that one thousand of the militia of this state are ordered to join the continental army; and that a large number of the Pennsylvania militia are directed to hold themselves in readiness to march on a short notice, to camp.

On the night of the 14th inst. Sergeant Bainbridge, of the New-Levies, deserted from Staten-Island, and brought off Capt. Steward's wife, two privates, six horses, and a considerable sum of hard money.

We hear that the French squadron, M. de Ternay, came south about, in order to relieve Charlestown. Off the Capes of Virginia he fell in with Admiral Graves with six English line of battle ships, when a skirmish ensued, in which one of the enemy's ships in running down the line of the French, was so severely handled that the English Admiral thought it most prudent to sheer off, and made the best of his way to New-York, where the damaged ship is now repairing.

Admiral Graves, with ten sail of men of war, sailed from the Hook on Thursday or Friday last, but their destination is not known.

We also learn that on the 4th inst. a severe engagement happened in the West-Indies, between the combined fleets of France and Spain and that of the English, in which the French took two 74's and sunk one 64, beside doing the British other considerable damage.

This account is said to be published in a late New-York paper, but we have not yet been able to obtain a sight of it.

The new crops of wheat and rye, in this quarter, are remarkably good; and there is as great a show for fruit of almost every kind as has been perhaps for many years back.

Extract of a letter from a capital mercantile house in Amsterdam, (Holland) to a gentleman in this state, dated May 1, 1780.

“The friends of America in this country persevere in their attachment to the good cause, and their opponents still preserve their former sentiments; however upon the whole, the political sky, which at particular times has been much clouded over your country, is clearing up very fast—Ireland has already a volunteer army under the most approved whig leaders, who are of their own choice—The whigs of England are associating after the example of America—Great Britain has made herself odious to all the commercial nations of Europe by her arrogance in pretending to keep the sovereignty of the seas, and by her injustice in seizing and condemning neutral vessels, contrary to treaty. The time is now come when those nations will insist on their right to a free trade, and are determined to support the honour of their respective flags—There is already a negotiation on foot, and as good as concluded, between the Courts of Russia, Denmark, Sweden, Portugal, and this Republic (to which they were invited by the Empress of Russia) to make it a common cause, and to form a system for the protection of their coinmerce to every part of the world, and not suffer it to be interrupted by any nation whatever—She has already declared her design to the belligerent powers, and requested the concurrence of our States; and tho' you know our motions are generally very slow, in this instance the Province of Holland resolved immediately not only to enter into the plan, but to confer with Prince Gallitzin, the Russian Ambassador, on the best and most effectual measures to accelerate the negotiation and to complete the plan. We believe that a Russian squadron will, for that purpose, soon be in the British Channel to act in conjunction with ours, as there is not a doubt of the other provinces following the example of that of Holland. The Court of Great Britain are in great jeopardy, and seem to act irresolutely desperate—About the middle of April last, when they found the Dutch would not at any rate grant them succours, but on the contrary, were determined to assist in abridging their assumed sovereignty of the seas, to cover their chagrine and disappointment published a declaration charging the Republic with deserting their alliance, and have suspended, till further orders, all the particular privileges in commerce it has hitherto enjoyed—the very mention of privileges, which we never enjoyed but when they pleased, is affronting in the highest degree: Generally speaking, these would be called privileges with the same propriety as the British cruelties practiced in America may be called tender mercies—Finding we were not very uneasy in consequence of their threatenings, a great ministerial house in London has written that by properly appealing, the condemnation of our vessels, taken under Count Byland's convoy, would be reversed. A great patriotic character among us, whom you know, I believe to have been very instrumental in our present measures. — — — Thus we may truly say, “auspice ————— “tandem bona causa triumphat,” tho' by the bye there have been great political struggles here. The effects of this triumph must extend to America; for if after the open declaration of two great powers in its favour, the other maritime ones should combine to preserve a neutrality, and at the same time to protect and insist upon a free trade, England must stop her mad career or sink forever. I have therefore strong hopes that peace may at length be the issue of these proceedings; especially if England could have its intolerable pride humbled by a blow at sea.

“You were, when among us, a personal witness of the inclination of many wealthy individuals of this country to place part of their money in the American funds; that inclination is not altered;—— and should that desired peace be brought about by proper management, almost any sums might be procured, and at a lower rate than it would be possible in any other part of Europe. We hope to see speedily some person properly authorized for the above purpose, as well as for the granting of vacant lands, as we already observe a spirit prevailing here which agrees well with that idea. — — Thus would America reap important advantages from the wealthy individuals of Holland being its creditors, and land proprietors, as interest would fix and increase the attachment, and produce the same effects as the English stocks have done, but on much better ground.

“Before this reaches you, the French fleet destined for America will be probably on your coast. I hope your army will be ready for co-operation—the troops on board will very considerably increase the number.

“We will persevere in promoting the cause of America in Holland, and request your continued correspondence to enable us the better so to do.”

No observations are necessary, but it is hoped that every one who may be detected in the threatened violences, will, in their turn be most exemplarily and emphatically Retaliated upon—Two Gentlemen long active in the Rebel interest, were lately made prisoners and brought from Elizabeth Town to this city, where instead of pains and imprisonment they are, through the grace and benignity of government, genteely lodged, entertained and protected from every kind of insult, whereas the King's Loyal Subjects, merely for a conscientious adherence to their principles, have been to the everlasting infamy of a rebel legislature, condemned at mock tribunals, tortured and ignominiously put to death; and hitherto not one single instance of retaliation has been attempted upon the monstrous actors in these horrid Tradegies.

NEW-JERSEY.

Chatham, July 26, Last Friday General Wayne, with a detachment of 1800 men, made an assault upon a block-house of the enemy near Bull's Ferry, on the North-River, but finding it very strong, (held only by 84 Refugees) drew off the men. Our loss, we are told, amounts to near 50 killed and wounded. (But the Returns say 150.)

On Tuesday last died at Newark, in the 68th year of his age, Uzal Ogden, Esq;¹ a gentleman of undissembled goodness, and universally esteemed.—The Royal Gazette, No. 400, July 29, 1780.

For the NEW-JERSEY JOURNAL.

Friends and Fellow-Citizens,

IN my late address to General Knyphausen, while I recollect the instances of their barbarity, I found those two effects upon my own mind, viz. Fortitude superior to their heaviest strokes, and such abhorrence and detestation of their ways, as would forbid forever any thoughts of union with them. Those feelings and sentiments I wish to engrave in your breasts.

Arguments at this period of the war to prove the justice of our cause, or importance of the controversy, would be useless, nay would be insults upon your understandings.

But our successes in arms and in gaining the powerful alliances of foreign nations, have lulled us into a dangerous security. You neither want wisdom to conduct, or courage to finish, what you have carried so far with unequalled reputation. But as the bravest minds are the most tender and gentle, those soft feelings of yours have betrayed you too soon into a forgiving indolence, and led you to hope that the war might be finished without those vigorous exertions which might prove bloody to yourselves and must end in the total destruction of our enemies. Save Britain has been the common cry! It was my own. Themselves have schooled us out of our error, and taught us that we must entirely put out the flame, or loose the building.

Britain hath long seen the conquest of America, by force alone, is impracticable. She has therefore had recourse to stratagems, by which she hopes to gain an accomodation, if not a victory. An accomodation that will give such power to neutrals and tories as will gain a flower, but not less certain, nor less fatal, victory in the end. To accomplish this she has too well succeeded in depreciating our money, by her emissaries both without and within our lines and councils. But she can never accomplish her design unless your zeal and vigour are depreciated with our money. This is now attempted by various means. Some they endeavour to crush by making rapid excursions and cruelly, and totally divesting them of their property;—others are stolen from their beds into captivity;—others are allured by hopes and fears to trade and parole submission. By thus gradually removing from the lines such spirits as they could not tame, and enlarging their connections among the meaner sort, they hope gradually to make their way into the country. We are therefore often told by their abettors, that they can go where they please, and take whom they will. One to save his house will declare, "That no rebel gun was ever fired from behind it;" Another, to save his person, seeks a parole, or refuses to take any active part. The calamities of war are held up in magnified prospects on the one hand; and the mild terms offered by the enemy more falsely trumpeted upon the other. The most horrid murders, and other barbarities, committed by them, are attributed to accident, or the error of some unsupported individual. And from Lord North downward, they are all declaring they do not mean to injure this country, but to watch the favourable moment of the war to give us peace and order. That all their barbarity in the field, the destruction of our property, and the far more cruelly flow murders of thousands in their prisons, was only designed for our good, and to prepare us for the olive branch. By those pretensions some are imposed upon, and our public danger increased. Yet how little reason there is for the imposition, reflection will soon convince you. The death of our paper currency, and the fall of Charlestown happening near together, flushed their hopes, and, in their opinion, gained them the point which Lord North deemed proper for extending the olive branch. But what was their conduct? In the South, the cruelty of their conduct, and high demands of Clinton's proclamations, were sufficient to draw the pale ghosts from the graves of their former fears, resolved to check the tyrant or deliver themselves by an honourable death in arms. And amongst us their barbarities rose with their hopes, till they have proved to us, by the strong language of plunder, flames, and murder, that they only waited for power, wholly to desolate the friends of liberty. Your dwelling-houses and temples in flames before your eyes; the aged, the widow, the fatherless insulted, beaten, plundered, without pity, are arguments you understand and feel. And Oh! that unequalled act of guilt and cruelty! I cannot forget it myself, nor am I willing you should. Defended by every personal charm; protected by a complete collection of the softest and most charming virtues; guarded by a sucking infant and a large family of depending babes, and who, sitting still in her own house, might thereby claim, at least, life from the enemy, in whose power she had put her's;—yet she falls by the deliberate aim of an instigated soldier! What then have you to expect if fully in their power? Some of the enemy affect to say her death was accidental. I have seen, and you will see, sufficient proof to the contrary. But suppose some of the enemy thought so, did they shew one mark of grief, pity or humanity. Did one officer or one soldier, protect the corps, or save any property for the bereaved babes.—Not one. General Robertson's wagon was brought to the door and loaded by his own servants, with the beds and family goods. General Skinner knew the lady and her family. He had many years pleaded at the bar where her father was Judge. Long sat a fellow member with him in the Legislature. But the plunder of the house was more in his eyes than the murdered person of his old friends daughter. And her corps which was in part stripped, must have been consumed in the flames had it not been for the humanity of some who were not of the army.

The enemy have also insulted your understanding by as a reason why they burned your houses that you fired out of them. Had it been convenient to have used our houses as forts, we should have been justified in it, and could the enemy have fired them at that time they would also have been justified. But after they were not, and could not again be used for that purpose, the reason for burning ceases. But the whole story is false in fact. I knew but of one house out of which a gun was fired at the Farms or Springfield. If there are any more instances they are very few. And did not the enemy avail themselves of our houses in Elizabeth-Town, while they lay in it and fired upon us out of the windows?

From every view then of the enemies conduct, it is evident you have nothing to expect from them but the effects of pride and malice hightened by resistance. Many may now be flattered by them and a few villains may be finally protected, to answer their purposes. But if they could conquer this country for the present, they could not hold the conquest without crushing us very low.

That necessity will favour their dispositions to prosecute the object. As a warning, I give an extract, which I assure you is genuine, from the Journal of a principal officer of their own, when speaking of a number of persons of considerable note, who came into General Howe from Philadelphia; he says, "they are all very politely received for the present, but their several characters are particularly known to the General, and a day of reckoning is "to come hereafter."

In these circumstances, my countrymen, divine providence is rousing us to action by the most favourable prospects, our allies are gaining the superiority by sea in the different quarters of the globe; and at the same time have sent a very powerful aid to us. The remains of this campaign are big with important events. The danger and the expence of one liberal supply of one vigorous effort, will be much less than a lingering war. While in the one case our success is morally certain, and in the other doubtful. Rouse then at once to action, and flash the final shock upon those who disgrace humanity. Nay, humanity cannot live till they are dead. Give the necessary supplies with your personal services. We shall either gain an honourable death, or secure a fine country in circumstances more advantageous to posterity than our fathers found it at first, even if we loose our moveable property. Free yourselves from the hope of reunion with such men. Hope, did I say? Pardon the expression! Your generous souls are too sensibly stung with resentment to admit the unnatural bond! Slavery and freedom, savage insolence and soft humanity, cannot live together. The tories are now returning to their original: Horse thieves, night robbers and murderers. They are banding themselves together for the execution of their plan. Rise then together to exterminate those wretches root and branch from this continent, which was given to freemen. The late militia law is favourable beyond others to you who only deserve the country because you fight for it. And as the government is fully in your own power you need nothing but watchful zeal to have all your own. Let me again intreat you to look back on what you have done and gained, and also to consider what you have at stake. Let not the want of a last brave effort sacrifice the whole. Do not so much as please the tories ears, by a groan under the complicated difficulties you have to struggle with. The greater they are, the more honour you will gain by chearfully* surmounting them. In a future day we shall enjoy pleasing reflections, and feel rich, in proportion to the losses we have sustained, in preserving our country. He that has lost nothing will not dare to be seen among Freemen. Let affection strengthened by sufferings; fears, rouzed by dangers; and fortitude supported by the greatest prospects, unite and invigorate the grand struggle, that we may soon be in full liberty and peace, each enjoy all that is contained in the character of A CITIZEN.

CHATHAM August 2.

Within a few days past, upward of forty persons have been confined in Morris Town gaol for being concerned in passing counterfeit money.—By the exertions of the inhabitants, we hope a stop will soon be put to such a nefarious practice.

Last week one Steel, a horse thief, of Morris county, having some time since been taken, was under guard, when attempting to make his escape, received the reward due to his demerit, by being shot through the body by the centinel.

On Sunday last, eight of the infamous refugees, five of whom pretended to be officers in the tyrant's service, were brought to the commissary of prisoners at Elizabeth-Town from Monmouth. When they were captured, they plead they came over with a flag, and produced their orders; but their frivolous pretensions would not answer their end, and they are sent to Philadelphia, to occupy a corner in the new gaol until exchanged.

We have the pleasure to assure our readers, that Ensign Moody, a refugee from Sussex to the British army, and who was lately sent from New-York with a party of ruffians for the purpose of burning Sussex gaol, of taking or assassinating Governor Livingston and the persons who were active in apprehending the three spies lately executed, and of inlisting our inhabitants in the service of the British tyrant, was lately captured himself by the vigorous exertions of Capt. Lawrence of the New-York state levies, near the English neighbourhood—The instructions found upon Moody, in order to give the better colour to his private directions for inlisting and assassinating, and to prevent his being treated as a spy from the military stile, what he was to produce, in case of his being taken prisoner, was in the following terms :

“Head-Quarters, May tenth, New-York, 1780.

“S I R,

“You are hereby directed and authorized to proceed without loss of time, with a small detachment, into the Jerseys, by the most convenient route, in order to carry off the person of Governor Livingston, or any other acting in publick station, whom you may fall in with in the course of your march, or any person whom you may meet with, and whom it may be necessary to secure for your own security, and that of the party under your command.

“Should you succeed in taking Governor Livingston, you are to treat him according to his station, as far as lies in your power ; nor are you, upon any account, to offer any violence to his person. You will use your endeavour to get possession of his papers, which you will take care of, and, upon your return, deliver at head-quarters.

By order of his Excellency Lieutenant-General Knyphausen.

GEO. BECKWITH, Aid de Camp.

To Ensign Moody, 1st battalion
New-Jersey volunteers.

It is said that all Moody's party, except one, who attempted to swim the North river in his flight, and is supposed to be drowned, have been either captured or killed by the activity of our inhabitants; and as to the famous or infamous Ensign himself, the great taker of Governors and general gaol deliverer of Sussex, he is at present safely lodged at West-Point; and if he has justice done him, it is generally supposed, as our correspondent observes, that he will be hanged for a spy, for inlisting our citizens in the British army, and coming with a party so small as nine, and with weapons concealed, either of which are, according to the present construction of all the nations of Europe, characteristic of a spy.

It is reported that another party was sent from Staten-Island last week for the express purpose of assassinating his Excellency our Governor. Ought not such bloody measures to be retaliated upon the enemy?

Yesterday sennight died of the wounds, he received in an attack on the block-house, near the English Neighbourhood, Lieut. Jacob M. DeHart, of the 2d Pennsylvania regiment (a brother to Col. De Hart.) This youth fell at the age of eighteen, bravely, and was universally lamented.—Every military honour was paid his remains by his affectionate brother officers.

TRENTON, AUGUST 2.

The French fleet, commanded by the Chevalier de Ternay, left Brest the 2d May. A considerable body of French troops were then lying there to be embarked, but there were not transports at Brest to receive them. It was expected that many transports would be ready in the course of three or four weeks, when it is probable that those troops will sail for America, escorted by some ships of the line under the command of the Count Duchassaud.

On Tuesday, the 25th of July, were happily married at Mansfield, in Burlington county, Mr. Thomas Richards, aged sixty-eight, to Mrs. Elizabeth Ricketts, aged sixty-two.

In the morning of the 25th ult. died at Camp, of the wounds he received in bravely doing his duty before the Block-house near Bull's ferry, on the 21st, Lieutenant Jacob Morris De Hart, of the 2d Pennsylvania regiment, aged nineteen years.¹ The emulation and fire necessary to warm a soldier's breast soon kindled in this young, but manly officer, having entered into the service of his country at sixteen; from which time his sweetness of disposition, and attention to duty, gained him the affection of officers of every rank.—At five o'clock in the afternoon he was buried with the honours of war; attended by a large concourse of officers from the different lines of the army.

The infamous Jock Hyde, alias John Haight, jun. who had not long ago joined the enemy on Staten-Island, was lately made prisoner in Woodbridge, whither he had come with an intent to steal horses; and was on Sunday last safely lodged in the gaol of this town.

Sunday night last a plundering party of the enemy came from Staten-Island to Woodbridge, where they collected a few cattle, but the militia presently collected, drove off the enemy and recovered the cattle.

Yesterday were brought to town under guard, being on their way to Philadelphia, Col. George Taylor, Lieut. Samuel Leonard, Lieut John Thompson, Ensign John Lawrence, and Chrineyonce VanMater, late inhabitants of Monmouth, and three others.—They were made prisoners at Shrewsbury on Wednesday last by a party of our militia.

Captain Barry arrived at Philadelphia a few days ago in a short passage from St. Eustatia, and we are told brings advice, that the combined fleets of France and Spain sailed five days before he left St. Eustatia, from Martinico, with 6 or 8000 troops on board, supposed to be gone against Barbados.

Extract of a letter from Camp at Pracanness, dated July 29, 1780.

“This morning, at three o’clock, the whole army except the Jersey brigade, marched from this place, as we imagine for King’s ferry, and how much further is very uncertain. It appears by accounts from New-York that Sir. H. Clinton, with all the troops he can muster, are embarked on board transports and gone up the East-River. It is also said by good authority, that Admirals Arbuthnot and Graves with all their ships and little boats, are now lying before Rhode-Island.—You will readily conjecture from these circumstances, that our good friends and allies will soon have an opportunity of discovering to every political infidel or tory their attachment and zeal for this country, and their high sense of the honour of their Prince.”

ANY persons having two or three Scows to dispose of, may hear of a purchaser by applying to Capt. Miller, No. 37 King Street.—The Royal Gazette, No. 401, August 2, 1780.

To the PRINTER of the ROYAL GAZETTE.

IT would be superfluous to call to remembrance the almost infinite and artful frauds practised by American demagogues, to precipitate the Colonies into their present deplorable condition.

To compare their odious tyranny with the Turkish government, would really be doing great injustice to that empire; for tho' in those provinces, the rich, occasionally may be squeezed by the Bashaws, who, in turn, receive the bow string, yet the people really are at their ease.

In the revolted Colonies, life, liberty, and property is undeniably at command of every despot in power in or out of the Congress. How often have we heard that their invincible navies and armies, were sufficient to defend them against the world;—that a great part of Europe depended on their granaries, and that Great Britain utterly exhausted must decline future efforts.

¹For some notices of several persons of this name, see Proceedings N. J. Hist. Soc., 3d Series, 3: 139–140.

In fine, the Congress, last year, impiously declared that their Empire was fixed as fate, &c. Notwithstanding this firm basis of Independence, French fleet and army is arrived to prop its foundation, as they alledge.

The French unquestionably possess a pliant versatility of manners, unknown to the bravest nations of Europe; therefore I doubt not their perfectly according for the present, with their allies, whom they will acknowledge the most grateful, brave, candid and humane people that ever existed. Indeed we are already informed, that the French troops have more than extreme ardour to combat for American freedom, so congenial to French liberty; and that the inhabitants of the States, are animated with an ardent enthusiasm, to contend for the glory of the Grand Monarque.

These Halcyon days must speedily terminate.

Every considerable American remembering the invariable national perfidy of France, will dread Realization of the fable of the Horse, who invoked the aid of man. This severe truth, is very constantly justified by history, and expressly confirmed by their lately celebrated Abbe Reynal, who is by no means chargeable as prejudiced in favour of England.—In his history of the settlements p. 380, Book XIX His words are “In short the insulting behaviour of France which encreased with her victories; the natural turns of her intrigues to “spread dissention every where to reign alone; her contempt for the “fate of treaties, her haughty and authoritative tone confirmed the “change of envy, into hatred, and raised universal alarms.”

Contrary to every human probability, let us now suppose the houses of Bourbon, to attain the Empire of the Main.

Surely no man of understanding can conceive that the policy which sacrificed its national honour, faith, blood and treasure, to acquire an object so important, would permit the creation of a naval power in America, soon to become more certainly formidable than that depressed at such vast expence. Is there a sensible Colonist unacquainted, that such naval power soon must arise; that a fact so obvious, cannot elude the attention of a court celebrated for political knowledge; or that a nation, contemning the faith of treaties, would not confide in seeing this American fleet invariably ranged under her banners? France, tho’ profiting by the treason, must despise and distrust the Traitors, and will constantly remember, that as her unnatural connexion is far less profitable to America than one with Britain, it must be torn asunder as soon as the provinces can avow their sentiments. This event, probably would be accelerated by death or removal of the present incendiaries, or by a British Minister holding out alliance and offers of aid to conquer Hispaniola, or other French spoils.

Never can it become the interest of Great-Britain to conquer Mexico, or any considerable possessions of Spain. The situation and goodness of her country, and the native industry of her inhabitants, will always command the mines of Mexico, on easier and more rational terms than conquest. But if permanent empire is fixed in the British colonies; the Spanish monarchy in America, must, and speedily will be dissolved. It therefore requires no penetration to perceive, that however expedient to the present purposes of the House of Bourbon to cajole my countrymen, they never can become free or independent by concurrence of these powers.

Actuated by this sound policy, France with avidity, seized the first pretext to make a lodgement in one of the gates of America, and she will not speedily lose sight of the finest provinces of this country; from which she never can be expelled, save by Great Britain, the natural guardian of America.

But many well meaning persons may alledge that my countrymen have equal ardour and power to prevent such degradation, by expelling the arms of France. Time will evince the utter impracticability of this assertion. Posterity will agree that considerable part of the consequence, real or apparent, of the insurgents, originated in the parliamentary opposition; in the mistaken, tho' generous lenity of Great Britain; or in other causes, several of which most happily no longer exist.

The affair at Trenton did not cost the assailants ten men, and I have reason to believe that the surprize would never have been attempted, if an almost moral certainty of success had not presented.

Troops so advantageously posted, never made a more important defence, than did the insurgents at Brandywine. The action at Germantown may do some credit to Mr. Washington's sagacity, but disgraces his troops.—The surrender of General Burgoyne's army does not militate against the present purpose: In effect, he did not surrender 3000 fighting men, and if his proceedings had not been marked by a series of fatalities, it is probable the New Englanders, to this hour, would have rested their defence in GOD and the Southern Army.* By the French alliance, and abandonment of Philadelphia, the rebels acquired numbers and confidence, till then unknown: But during the long, dangerous and ably conducted march thro' the Jerseys, did they effect any glorious or advantageous purpose? Were they not disgraced by part of a division of the army under the eye of the enlightened Commander in Chief? If unhappily it had been thought expedient to have transported the King's army from Philadelphia to New-York, innumerable gasconades respecting the absolute impossibility of penetrating through the Jerseys in the face of the invincible Rebel army, had been obtruded on the world, and would have obtained credit with those who, from simplicity or design judge, or affect to judge of causes by events which never originated in, or were generated by said causes. Certainly the late attack by Mr. Washington's chosen bands, on a handfull of brave wood-cutters, does not augur that his troops, even joined with the Saratoga army, would expel Mons. Rochambault from America.

That Gentle-man will probably not be undecisive in his defence,

* See the New-England Gazettes for August, 1777.

every principle forbids it.— There are no R ———s, no minorities in France. &c.

Nothing therefore seems clearer, in human affairs, than, that the revolted colonies, unaided by Great Britain, never can shake off the yoke of France, and that dependence on that kingdom must ruin America. That nation only by her racks and wheels, can prevent emigration to the colonies; the surest source of power and wealth.

It is her's to enervate and immoralize the Americans, by her frivolous and voluptuous manners, to seduce their abject leaders, or awe the refractory by prompt and arbitrary decisive measures. Her merchant's have not sufficient power or inclination to promote American industry, or even commerce, which they avariciously monopolize, to the impoverishment of our natives, in whom they have no confidence: deficient themselves, in that honest mercantile English candour so ill compensated by French finesse. Every intelligent American will perceive these facts, and that a perfect contrast is found in connection with Great-Britain, who has tendered more than we desired.

Her generous merchants again would have been enriched by yielding unaccustomed and unbounded faith.— Her fleets would have defended us; no mushroom armies had devoured us; arrets would not have extorted the surplus provisions of all families, rum, salt, &c. Then ordonnances would not have compelled on pain of expulsion from their houses, the miserable inhabitants of Rhode-Island, to labour without DISTINCTION on the French lines. Nor in every province accumulated crimes and miseries so multiplied, so humiliating, that I blush to have received existence in a country submitting to such galling chains, forged surely by the least respectable in the community.

These recreant leaders, are clearly apprized of the conclusions resulting from these premisses, but lost to every sentiment of virtue, humanity, and patriotism; they are proud of becoming slaves to France, more securely to enslave their unhappy country. Ambitious of unmerited self-importance and empire, they have plunged their country into the deepest anarchy and misery. Unhappily too well have they succeeded in the first, but humanely speaking, their efforts for the last will certainly be found premature:

Time most assuredly will evince, that the Colonists are to remain slaves to France;* if they do not once more become a happy people, by renewing and cementing their natural connexion, with the most respectable nation and government, (including all its imperfections) that ever did or perhaps will exist on the earth.

COLONUS.

* It is confidently said, that Mr. Izard, lately arrived in the fleet from France, boldly and loudly proclaims in Philadelphia, that the Congress beyond possibility of doubt, have undone their country by basely selling her to France.

To the PRINTER.

SIR,

A GREEABLE to your request, I give the following narrative of what I saw, heard, and conceived relative to the death of Mrs. Caldwell; not as you say to contradict the Rebel accounts (for they sufficiently contradict each other) but for the satisfaction of such judicious inquirers as wish to be informed.

I, without being requested by any one, or attached to any detachment of the army, from mere curiosity, marched from Elizabeth Town with a column of British troops, I did not enquire, nor do I yet know who commanded them; the column halted near a house said to be Mr. Caldwell's: I soon saw a group of soldiers in and about said House, and on my nearer approach, heard some of them mention, (rather piteously) a woman's being shot in the house, as soon as the crowd dispersed, I entered the house and not without difficulty, found her laying on her back on a bed that stood in a small dark back bed room, (for I don't recollect it had any window) tho' it had two doors that opened into other apartments. She was to appearance dead, and had a cloth carelessly thrown over her face, which I did not remove but left her, expecting the troops would soon march, when her friends might take care of her. Some time after this, a detachment moved near Rahway river, I followed, and did not return in less than three hours, when some person who was near Mr. Caldwell's house, told me the woman was stripped, and thrown off the bed, but that a British officer's coming in, had prevented the soldiers from carrying off her cloaths: On entering the house, I found her laying on her face on the floor beside the bed, and most of what cloaths had been pulled off by her side. I concluded she had been taken off of the bed that the bedding might be taken from under her:—As I came out of the house I met at the door a Mr. Benjamin Dunn, a Refugee of Piscataway, (New-Jersey) who seemed sensibly touched with the humane feelings of an informed Loyalist; he had not yet seen the corpse, but desired me to shew her to him; I did so: We then examined every circumstance in our power, in order, if possible, to discover the cause of the lady's death, who by this time we had heard was Mrs. Caldwell. We found that on account of a pantry that was building on the back side of the house, a small spot of covering had been pulled off opposite to the bed whereon the Lady sat, the only ball we could discover that had touched the house, was the one that killed her: It appeared to have come from a northern direction (in the course of the Rebel fire) and passed between the joints of the plaistered wall, it seemed to have passed so far above the bed, as to have hit her above her girdle and its passing through her left breast I account for, by supposing her to have sat in a stooping posture.—Mr. Dunn, and myself, (for I cannot say which proposed it) concluded to go to the nearest house, which we did, and asked the woman to call some of the neighbouring women, and go to lay the corps out. This she declined, but said, she would send for assistance if we could get help to remove her to her house, which was done; and at the instance of Mr. W. Chandler, a Hessian sentinel was set at the door, while the women performed their last kind office to their friend; at this house was a young woman, who said that she sat on the same bed with Mrs. Caldwell at the time she was shot, and that she was shot by the continental troops. About two hours after the corpse was removed, Mr. Caldwell's house was set on fire.

I am, Sir,

Your most obedient,

Humble Servant,

EBENEZER FOSTER.¹

¹ Ebenezer Foster was a prominent citizen of Woodbridge some years before the Revolution. He was already one of the trustees of the Free Schools of the Township when Governor Franklin granted a charter of

[Mr. Foster, (who gives the above account of Mrs. Caldwell's fate, was a justice of peace in the county of Middlesex in New Jersey) is a Gentleman of great integrity, and a very loyal subject.]

About a week ago Justice Barnes¹ of Woodbridge, Isaac Freeman, and an elderly man, and Joseph Shotwell, of 70 years of age, suspected of being secretly friends to the old constitution, were committed to Morristown gaol, in incorporation to the trustees, June 24th, 1769, naming Mr. Foster as one of them. He was a vestryman of the Church of England of Woodbridge, and was named as such in the charter incorporating the church, December 6th, 1769. He was appointed a justice of the peace of Middlesex county, June 9th, 1770. He was commissioned a Judge of the Court of Oyer and Terminer of the same county, July 10th, 1773, and on December 14th, 1773, was appointed a Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of that county. His sympathies were evidently with the British, and perhaps it was because this fact was well understood, that at a meeting of the freeholders of the county, on January 3d, 1775, held pursuant to the recommendations of the Continental Congress, he was appointed on a committee of observation for Woodbridge. A few days later, at a meeting of the inhabitants of the town, he was appointed on the committee of observation, and with two others was authorized, in case the Assembly failed to appoint delegates to the Continental Congress in the May following, to meet with the committees from the other counties of the province in Provincial Congress, and appoint such delegates. On January 16th, 1775, at a general meeting of the committee of observation and inspection, Mr. Foster was appointed on the committee of correspondence for the county of Middlesex. Subsequently, just when we have no record, Mr. Foster was arrested as a sympathizer with the British. At a meeting of the Convention of the State of New Jersey, July 19th, 1776, he "asked and was given leave on his parole, and security in the sum of £1,000, to remove to the public house of Mr. White, in Barnardstown, in the county of Somerset, and not to go more than six miles from thence, unless with the leave of the Convention, or the future Legislature of this State." His confinement naturally was irksome, and on August 2d he prayed that he might be permitted to return to his farm at Woodbridge, but the petition was ordered to lie on the table. He fled with other refugees to Staten Island, and was there on September 22d, 1777, when he signed his name as witness to the will of Oswald Ford, another refugee from Woodbridge. An inquisition was found against him and many other persons of Middlesex county, "who had either joined the army of the King of Great Britain, or had otherwise offended against the form of their allegiance to the State," and he was advertised August 15th, 1778. Judgment final was entered against him in due course, and his property was advertised to be sold on March 22d, 1779. He probably remained on Staten Island, but did not join the army, as appears from his communication to the printer of the Royal Gazette, of New York, August 5th, 1780, given above.

¹ Samuel Barnes was commissioned Judge of the Middlesex Court of Oyer and Terminer, July 10th, 1773. Was this the person meant?

NEW-YORK, August 7.

We are told there are few or none of the Continental Army from Newark to Amboy, or in the Vicinity of East-Jersey: They having been called away by General Washington, who we hear has crossed Hudson's River, at King's Ferry, and is now in the Neighbourhood of the White Plains, about 30 Miles from this City.—The New-York Gazette: and the Weekly Mercury, No. 1503, August 7, 1780.

It is reported that another party was sent from Staten Island last week for the express purpose of assassinating his Excellency our Governor. Ought not such bloody measures to be retaliated upon the enemy?—The Pennsylvania Gazette, August 9, 1780.

Extract of a letter from a Gentleman in Morristown, dated June 23, 1780. (Two o'clock, P. M.)

“The Commander in Chief has for several days past been extending the left wing of our army towards the north, so as to prevent the enemy from out flanking him with their right.

“This morning early General Knyphausen with thirteen regiments, consisting of about 5000 regular troops exclusive of New Levies, advanced upon our right which was commanded by Major General Green. The progress of the enemy was slow, at least six hours moving from the Point to Springfield, did but little mischief on their march. When they arrived, were checked by the spirited conduct of a few Continentals and some Militia, who gave them so warm a reception they thought proper to halt and burn every house, except two or three in the town of Springfield.

“Six o'clock P. M. The enemy retired to Elizabeth Town, 11 o'clock their main body are at the Point below the town.

“Twenty-fourth. It is reported that Clinton is gone up the North-river, with all the force he can make, exclusive of Knyphausen's division, and it is thought by some he will soon join.

“The loss of the killed and wounded on both sides must be very considerable. Col. Angel's and Col. Dayton's regiments have suffered much, a Capt. Thompson of Col. Lamb's regiment is killed; further particulars I have not yet been able to obtain, and have no doubt but you will receive authentic information of every important circumstance, more just and minute than is possible for me to give at this time; however I conclude, that even those imperfect hints might not be disagreeable.”

C H A T H A M, AUGUST 9.

¹ Moses Bloomfield, son of Joseph and Eunice (Dunham) Bloomfield, was b. at Woodbridge, December 4th, 1729; he m. 1st, Sarah, b. 1733, dau. of Robert and Phebe (Baldwin) Ogden; she d. October 25th, 1773; he m. 2d, the widow of Dr. Samuel Ward. It is not known where he studied medicine, but he soon achieved a reputation for skill in his profession. He was one of the original members of the New Jersey Medical Society, organized July 23d, 1766, and his name as secretary is appended to notices of meetings of the society, October 4th, 1767, and March 23d, 1768. He was prominent and influential in promoting the welfare of the society. He was named as a trustee in the charter of the First Presbyterian Church, in the township of Woodbridge, granted by Governor Jonathan Belcher, September 8th, 1756. The "Meeting House Green" was surveyed, at his request, August 8th, 1784. In the charter of the Free Schools in the town of Woodbridge, granted by Governor Franklin, June 24th, 1769, Moses Bloomfield is named as one of the trustees. In the charter granted by Governor Franklin, December 22d, 1773, for incorporating "The New Jersey Society for the Better Support of the Widows and Education of the Children of Deceased Presbyterian Ministers in Communion with the Present Established Church of Scotland," Moses Bloomfield was named as one of the incorporators. His name is appended to a set of resolutions adopted by the "Freeholders and Freemen" of Woodbridge, July 23d, 1770, affirming allegiance to King George, but declaring their adherence to the Non-Importation Agreement, until the British ministry should make "ample Confession of their Crime" in infringing upon the "natural Privileges of our happy Constitution," previously enjoyed by the colonists. Nevertheless, when there appeared in the same paper that published these resolves, and immediately following them, an advertisement plainly threatening the merchants who violated the agreement with tar and feathers, he wrote to the paper disclaiming for the Sons of Liberty of Woodbridge all responsibility for said advertisement, and declared that the "respectable Freeholders and Freemen of Woodbridge (acting as a Body) never did, nor ever will do, or cause to be done, any Thing inconsistent with Law or Liberty." He was appointed a justice of the peace and Judge of Middlesex county, September 19th, 1776, and was again appointed justice of the peace of the county, June 5th, 1787. He was clerk of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the county, 1773-1784, and frequently served as moderator of the town meetings. His name is signed, as secretary, to a letter sent by the Woodbridge committee, May 1st, 1775, to the several patriotic committees of Massachusetts, thanking them for the "noble stand" they had made. Among the deputies elected by Middlesex county to the convention of New Jersey, which met at Burlington, June 10th, 1776, and which adopted the first constitution of the State, July 2d, 1776, was Moses Bloomfield, but his name seldom appears in the minutes, indicating that for some reason he was not regular in attendance—probably because of service in the field, for on August 21st, 1776, he was appointed one of a committee of four members to audit bills approved by the convention, and on the same day that body ordered paid "to Dr. Moses Bloomfield five pounds, eleven shillings and five pence, in full of his account of medicines and attendance on Capt. Neal's Artillery Company," which was encamped at Perth Amboy during the summer. On May 14th, 1777, he was commissioned Hospital Surgeon of the Continental Army, and Hospital Physician and Surgeon, October 6th, 1780. He was at the hospital in Princeton, in October, 1778. He resigned December 13th, 1780. He was elected a member of the Assembly from Middlesex county in 1784. He died at Woodbridge, August 14th, 1791, and his tombstone stands in the Presbyterian churchyard in that town. In an obituary notice of his death, in the New Jersey Journal, August 31st, 1791, a correspondent writes: "He maintained an eminent character as a scholar, a physician, a gentleman and a Christian. In the early part of his life, he became acquainted with men as well as books. When his assistance as a physician was called for by the public, he cheerfully stepped forward and served with faithfulness and reputation as senior physician and surgeon until near the close of the war, when he retired to private life of his own accord. As a physician he was skillful, attentive and successful; easy and familiar in his manners and address; he was benevolent and liberal to the poor without ostentation, religious without bigotry, never ashamed to own in any company that he was a Christian; nor would he neglect his duty to God or to his fellowmen on any account whatever. His last illness, which lasted more than two years, he bore with an uncommon Christian patience and fortitude. In his death the State has lost a worthy citizen, and the Presbyterian Church an important member." Dr. Wickes says: "He was a man of fine appearance and of more than ordinary culture and ability, and was considered one of the best physicians of his day." His residence is thought to have been the old Bloomfield homestead, which, in 1873, was occupied by George C. Hance. His children (all by his first wife) were:

i. Joseph Bloomfield, b. October 18th, 1753; m. Mary McIlvaine, dau. of Dr. William McIlvaine. She d. 1818; he d. October 3d, 1825. He served in the army during the Revolution, and was afterwards Attorney-General and then Governor. He died without issue, so far as known.

ii. Samuel, b. February 14th, 1756; m. Abigail Ellis; he d. November 25th, 1806. He was a physician; settled at Colestown, Gloucester county. Children: Sarah Ogden, b. 1781; d. 1794; two sons are said to have survived him, and to have lost their lives in the War of 1812.

iii. Ann, m. 1st, John G. Wall; 2d, James Paton.

iv. Nancy, b. February, 1762; d. September 5th, 1764.

v. Hannah, b. 1763; m. James Giles; d. 1823.

vi. Isaac, b. June, 1764; d. January 16th, 1768.

For the NEW JERSEY GAZETTE.

Mr. COLLINS,

No part of the system for conducting the Quartermaster-General's department, adopted the 15th of last month, is of more importance, will give more satisfaction, or be attended with more salutary consequences, than that general regulation, comprehensive of all the departments, which discontinues the issues of rations from the publick stores after the first instant, to any person whatsoever, except such as are in camp or attached to and serving with the army.

All reformatations are difficult: No person who has become in the least acquainted with the improper consumption of the publick provisions, forage, and other articles, in every quarter of the country, will be surprised at the artifices we may expect to see practiced to defeat this regulation, and to have a custom continued which is very convenient to many individuals; no matter what expense it creates to the community, or what deficiencies it causes in the subsistence of the soldiery.

I ever thought the furnishing of rations to persons employed at posts and places throughout the country, and not attached to and moving with the army, the most destructive policy, and have seen it produce the most serious mischiefs. It is a little unaccountable how it was introduced, there being no kind of necessity for it, and no example of it in any other country. Every one knows that an army must be supplied by means of publick stores and magazines; it is plainly impracticable for them to produce their own necessaries. But this is not the case with those employed at posts, stations, and places not in camp or the vicinity. If it is said that money without rations cannot support persons in this predicament; I answer it is a shallow prejudice taken up without thought. Cannot wages be so calculated as to include pay and what would procure a ration per day? Do the Commissaries or others buy these rations of provisions, forage, fuel or anything else without money, and cannot the proper proportion of this money be applied in paying wages to the equivalent? If it is enquired, Where is the difference? I answer, a saving to the publick of two thirds of the expenditures for rations issued throughout the country; and give me leave to observe this is very far from being a trifle. Compute the wages of purchasing and of transportation; add wastage and casualties; and consider loose and erroneus issuing which may sometimes happen; and then decide whether a ration would not be bought at market for one third of what it costs to furnish it from the publick stores. If two thirds were saved, and the numbers of these people properly reduced, the payment of adequate wages to the necessary remainder would be practicable. The inconvenience of the thing would be found very small on the experiment, a very few extraordinary cases excepted.

But a deciding reason in favour of this measure, and which alone would be sufficient were every other wanting, is, that the custom of issuing rations at this, that, the other, and every place throughout the country has been a principal cause of the wants and sufferings of the army. Large supplies of provisions, forage, and every necessary article have been purchased, but they have been drawn away and absorbed on the communication, before they reached camp. Hundreds in every quarter, many of them doing little, many nothing at all, have abounded, while the officer and soldier, fighting the battles of his country in heat and cold, fatigue and danger, has been literally destitute. It is notorious that in times of the greatest extremity, when every kind of means has been resorted to, when the farmers have given up the sustenance of their families for the use of the army, I do not mention the forage of their stocks, the supplies have been shamefully diverted into another channel. These things ought not to have been; I trust we have at length come to the end of them. Every one is now fully convinced that in order to furnish the army these drains must be stopped. Were they kept open, there is no alternative but the army must go without. No country on the face of the earth could long support expenditures and consumptions similar to ours for a few years past. Place things on a proper footing and the rest will be easy.

The exception in favour of waggoners; the discretionary powers given to the Board of War, the Commander in Chief of the army, and commanding officers of a separate army, in particular and extraordinary cases, no reasonable man can object to; the necessity of these is obvious.

I will make one farther remark. The patients in the hospitals are well understood to be part of the army; but there are some few persons actually and daily attending in the hospitals and taking care of the sick, who may not have it in their power to derive subsistence from any other source than the publick stores. Where a case is indispensable, it will doubtless be attended to; but if the descriptions be not exact, abuses will probably continue, and it seems they have not been scarcer in this than in other departments.

These remarks are submitted to the general sense of the community, who are best judges of their propriety.

Mr. RIVINGTON.

I am one of those who constantly read your paper, in doing which the other day, I could not avoid taking notice of a letter that had been written by Mr. Benjamin Brown, Deputy Quarter Master General to Commissary Caldwell, about the restitution of property to the unhappy sufferers on Staten Island when Lord Sterling made a predatory visit there. Since that I found in a house in Elizabeth Town, when a part of the British army was last in the Jerseys, the following letter, which I will subjoin; by that it will plainly evince to the world how far his Lordship was moved by the partial distresses of some poor families, whom he suffered remorselessly to be stripped of the few comforts of life in that inclement season of the year.

Dear Sir,

Feb. 3, 1780.

I received your's of the 1st instant, and in answer thereto, I must confess, some qualms of conscience rankle my very soul. I am at a loss whether to comply with your requisitions in the first instance, or after deliberate thought to give you my total rejection of them. Could you believe it, my good Sir, possible, that the only man engaged in the American cause against our enemy, enobled by birth,¹ and who bears so high a military rank and reputation among us, should issue an order to me for the collecting and restoring all the property to the several owners plundered on Staten Island, yet I am free to declare that very nobleman was the first who put his own seal upon some of the said plunder to be retained as his property.

This shameless procedure is such a gross violation of faith, so injurious to the honour and dignity of the independent states of America, and so derogatory to the character and name of his Lordship, particularly after the solemn representation to the General of the equity of his designs, that I will venture so far to presage from it, whenever his Lordship may at any subsequent period be employed as the Commander of any military enterprize, the most inauspicious consequences will arise from it.

This will be delivered into your own hands I will pledge my honour, but for heaven's sake let me enjoin inviolable secrecy, and I request also that this may be instantly destroyed when read.

I am, my dear Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

JAMES CALDWELL.¹

From the PENNSYLVANIA PACKET,

AUGUST 1, 1780.

HEAD-QUARTERS, (Bergen County)

July 26, 1780.

HAVING received information that there were considerable numbers of cattle and horses on Bergen neck, within reach of the enemy, and having reason to suspect that they meant shortly to draw all supplies of that kind within their lines, I detached Brigadier General Wayne on the 20th, with the first and second Pennsylvania brigades with four pieces of artillery attached to them, and Col. Moyland's regiment of dragoons to bring them off. I had it also in contemplation, to attempt at the same time, ¹This letter is so unlike the courageous Caldwell, as to suggest the conclusion that it is a forgery.

the destruction of a Block-house erected at Bull's ferry, which served the purpose of covering the enemy's wood cutters, and giving security to a body of Refugees, by whom it was garrisoned, and who committed depredations upon the well affected inhabitants for many miles round.

General Wayne having disposed of his troops in such a manner as to guard the different landing places on the Bergen shore, upon which the enemy might throw over troops from York Island to intercept his retreat, and having sent down his Cavalry to execute the business of driving off the stock, proceeded with the first, second and tenth regiments, and the artillery to the Block house, which he found surrounded by an abattis and stockade. He for some time tried the effect of his field pieces upon it, but tho' the fire was kept up for an hour, they were found too light to penetrate the logs of which it was constructed. The troops, during this time, being galled by a constant fire from the loop holes of the house, and seeing no chance of making a breach with cannon, those of the first and second regiments, notwithstanding the utmost efforts of the officers to restrain them, rushed through the abattis, to the foot of the stockade, with a view of forcing an entrance, which was found impracticable. This act of intemperate valour was the cause of the loss we sustained, and which amounted in the whole to three officers wounded, 15 non-commissioned and privates killed, and 46 non commissioned and privates wounded.—The wounded officers are, Lieutenants Hammond and Crawford, of the first, and Lieutenant D'Hart, of the second, the last since dead. I cannot but mention his death with regret, as he was a young gentleman of amiable qualities, and who promised fair to be serviceable to his country.

The Dragoons, in the mean time, drove off the stock which were found on the Neck; the sloops and wood boats in the dock near the Block-house were burnt, and the few people on board them made prisoners.

I have been thus particular, lest the account of this affair should have reached Philadelphia much exaggerated, as is commonly the case upon such occasions. I have the honour to be,

With the greatest respect, Sir,
Your Excellency's most obedient servant,
GEORGE WASHINGTON.

His Excellency Samuel Huntington, Esq;

Published by order of Congress,

CHARLES THOMPSON, Sec'ry.

—The New-York Gazette: and the Weekly Mercury, No. 1504, August 14, 1780.

CHATHAM, August 9.

Certain intelligence having been received that Sir Henry Clinton had embarked the principal part of his force, and had proceeded to Huntington bay, on his way to Rhode-Island, to make a combined attack upon the fleet and army of our allies now there, His Excellency General Washington marched from his camp at Prackness the 29th of July, and crossed the North river the 31st, where a junction was formed with the troops under the command of Major-General Howe.¹ His Excellency had resolved, in case the enemy should continue their course to Rhode-Island, to march immediately to New-York and attack it. All the necessary preparations were made for this purpose, when intelligence arrived that the enemy had put back the 31st instant. It is to be regretted that they did not go on with their intended expedition, as our allies were well prepared to receive them, and they could have met with nothing but disgrace and defeat in that quarter; while in this we had every reason to expect, from the spirit and number of our troops, the most decisive and glorious success. Sir Henry no doubt relinquished his project in consequence of this movement of our army; and it must be confessed that he abandoned it with much more prudence than he undertook it. The object for which the army crossed the river having ceased, the whole re-crossed the 4th instant, and are marching towards Dobb's ferry, in prosecution of the original plan formed for the campaign.

The following, we are told, are the vessels that composed Admiral Graves's squadron, viz. The London, Bedford, Royal Oak, Prudent, America, and Shrewsbury, with the Amphitrite frigate.

Last week a party of our troops took, near the English Neighbourhood, four of the enemy's light horse, and killed one of their riders.

TRENTON, AUGUST 16.

By Captain Reiley, of the Pennsylvania line, who passed thro' this place yesterday, from Head-Quarters, charged with dispatches to Congress, we are informed, that the second division of the French fleet had a few days ago arrived on the coast from the West-Indies, consisting of six ships of the line and 4000 land forces; and that it was reported in camp that Admiral Arbuthnot had returned to New-York with several ships of war, where the enemy were busily employed in getting their heavy cannon on board the-shipping in the harbour.

Dr. Moses Bloomfield, Jonathan Bloomfield, a town collector, and Ensign Britton Moores, were lately made prisoners at Woodbridge, by a party of refugees from Staten-Island, and carried to New-York.

We are informed that a packet bound from England to New-York, was sent into the Delaware a few days ago by the Holker, Fair American, and a New-England privateer. She is a ship of considerable force, was carried by boarding her, and had a number of British officers on board. Her cargo consists of ten tons of English cheese, a large quantity of porter, and some dry goods.

We hear that Head-Quarters a few days ago was at Tappan.

The enemy have evacuated and destroyed the Block-house in Bergen county, in consequence, it is said, of our army returning to this side of the North River.

Since our last a number of the Pennsylvania militia have arrived here from different parts of that state, and are daily coming in, this being the place of rendezvous. They are under the command of Brigadier-Gen. Lacy, who came to town on Sunday last.

Last week a ship, captured by the privateer brigs Fair American and Holker, arrived at Philadelphia, with 380 pipes of Madeira wine.

By His EXCELLENCY The GOVERNOR.

THE MILITIA of this STATE is ordered to hold itself in readiness to march on the shortest notice.

In the New-York Gazette, or Weekly Post-Boy, May 1st, 1766, appears an advertisement offering for sale the mills of Andrew Leake, at Bromley, and a tract of land near the Falls of Lamaton, and a house and lot at New Germantown, signed by three assignees, one of them being John Taylor.—N. J. Archives, 25:102. At the beginning of the Revolution, he tendered his services to the patriots, and was chosen captain of one of the companies of militia raised in Hunterdon county, in the Fourth Regiment, under command of Colonel John Mehelm. On October 28th, 1775, he was promoted to the rank of Second Major; November 27th, 1776, he was made a Major in Colonel Read's Battalion, State Troops; February 17th, 1777, he was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the Fourth Hunterdon Regiment, and on May 23d, 1777, succeeded to the Colonelcy of that regiment. He retained his interest in military matters after the war, and became a General of Militia. Having become bondsman for the county collector of Hunterdon county, upon the defalcation of the latter in the amount of over £3,000, he was prosecuted in the Supreme Court in an action of debt, confessed judgment, and was committed to jail, September 29th, 1795, but on October 31st, following, was released. He had three children.

ii. Catharine, m. 1784, the Rev. William Boyd, pastor of the Lamington Presbyterian Church, Somerset county, October 20th, 1784, to the time of his death, May 17th, 1807.

iii. Lydia Kar.

There was a Colonel John Taylor of Middlesex county, who is easily mistaken for the Hunterdon county officer; a John Taylor of Monmouth county, who joined the British, and a John Taylor of Bordentown—all contemporaries. See "The Two Colonels John Taylor," by Henry Race, M.D.

COW CHACE.

Canto I.

TO drive the Kine one summer's morn,
 The Tanner¹ took his way,
 The Calf shall rue that is unborn
 The jumbling of that day.

And Wayne descending Steers shall know,
 And tauntingly deride,
 And call to mind in ev'ry Low
 The tanning of his hide.

Yet Bergen Cows still ruminat
 Unconscious in the stall,
 What mighty means were used to get
 And lose them after all.

For many Heroes bold and brave
 From New-Bridge and Tapaan
 And those that drink Passaick's wave,
 And those that eat Soupaan.¹

And Sons of distant Delaware
 And still remoter Shannon,
 And Major Lee with Horses rare
 And Proctor with his cannon.

All wond'rous proud in arms they came
 What Hero could refuse?
 To tread the rugged path to fame
 Who had a pair of shoes.

At six the Host with sweating buff,
 Arriv'd at Freedom's Pole,²
 When Wayne who thought he'd time enough
 Thus speechified the whole.

O ye whom glory doth unite
 Who freedom's cause espouse,
 Whether the wing that's doom'd to fight
 Or that to drive the Cows.

Ere yet you tempt your further way
 Or into action come,
 Hear Soldiers what I have to say
 And take a pint of Rum.

Intemp'rate valour then will string,
 Each nervous arm the better
 So all the land shall IO sing
 And read the General's letter.

Know that some paltry Refugees
 Whom I've a mind to fight,
 Are playing H[—] amongst the trees,
 That grow on yonder height.

Their Fort and Block Houses we'll level,
 And deal a horrid slaughter,
 We'll drive the Scoundrels to the Devil
 And ravish wife and daughter.

I under cover of th' attack
 Whilst you are all at blows,
 From English Neighb'hood and Tinack
 Will drive away the Cows.

For well you know the latter is
 The serious operation
 And fighting with the Refugees
 Is only demonstration.

His daring words from all the crowd
 Such great applause did gain
 That every man declar'd aloud
 For serious work with Wayne.

Then from the cask of Rum once more
 They took a heady jill,
 When one and all they loudly swore They'd fight upon the Hill.

But here—the Muse has not a strain
 Befitting such great deeds,
 Huzza they cried, huzza for Wayne
 And shouting—did their Needs.

End of Canto the 1st.¹

Our old acquaintance Mr. Washington, we learn is approaching us Polyphemus like, with hasty and ample strides, his dire intents (supported by myriads of heroes and in his train a thirteen inch mortar drawn by eight charming, lovely oxen) are given out to be another coup upon Powles Hook.—His last halt was at Paramus, some thirty miles off.

TAKEN up on Bergen shore, a ship's Boat. Whoever can prove their property and pay charges, may have her again by applying to Ebenezer Wan, in the Coenties Market.—The New-York Gazette: and the Weekly Mercury, No. 1505, August 21, 1780.

THE last number of this paper terminated the second quarter of the current year. The Editor presumes his subscribers must be sensible of the great expence he is at in publishing a newspaper at this time of general difficulty, and the necessity there is for punctual payments: He is therefore surprized, that though he has so often requested payment of those in arrears, so little notice has been taken of it; many of whom have not paid off their last year's subscription, which, by the depreciation of the money, if now paid, is of so small value that it is hardly worth receiving.— Those subscribers in the vicinage of Chatham, the Printer expects will pay him in produce at the old rate; those at a distance, who pay cash, he hopes, in future, will be punctual in their payments quarterly.

TO THE WORTHY CITIZENS OF NEW-JERSEY.

Friends and Countrymen,

THE war in which we now contend has been undertaken on principles as just and noble as bold and resolved as ever marked a revolution since the commencement of time. It has been prosecuted now five years with suffering and perseverance on our part, spite and cruelty on that of the enemy. Every new occasion brings irresistable proof that the same spirit which arrayed us at first is still with us; and no man who has looked into the history of the world, or is capable of solid reflexion, will admit that a contest so begun and so supported can be unsuccessful. To some I should be cautious of saying without an apology, but to you I can say with unreserved freedom, 'It is the doing of the Lord, and wondrous in our eyes.'

Perhaps, my countrymen, no instance, since the feudal times, can be produced of a war maintained so long on funds so slender. The spirit of the people has supplied the place of what all nations call the sinews of war. But we ought not to expect that this spirit will always hold so high as the full vigour of enthusiasm. We must lay it to our account to settle at length, except perhaps upon extraordinary occasions, into those principles and modes according to which other nations have acted in similar cases. This is the course of human nature, and it would be a poor mark of wisdom to presume that we are totally exempted from the infirmities of it.

When we speak of the means of terminating this controversy, it is now, and long has been known to every one that we want nothing but a stable finance to bring it speedily to the desired issue. To this defect in the political system all our debilities and embarrassments are referable. Whether it is to be charged to mistakes or abuses, or to unavoidable necessity, is not now the object of consideration. Let us forget for the present the things which are behind, and point every thought forward to the safety of our country. We know the disease, that is half the cure; and the remainder is not out of reach.

In the act for establishing a fund to sink and redeem the proportion of the bills of credit of the United States assigned as the quota of this state, passed the ninth of June last, I contemplate as wise and politick the provision made in the tenth section, enabling the holders of the present bills to exchange them for those to be issued agreeably to the resolutions of Congress of the 18th of March next preceding, at a defined rate. The operation of this may be rendered favourable both to the community and to individuals; to the community, by throwing a sum into the treasury equal to that handed out in exchange, and thus contributing the means of discharging the publick debts and pushing the campaign; and to individuals, because by speedily sinking the present bills, those to be issued are better secured against uncertainty and fluctuation, and because the rate of exchange ascertained in the law is much below the actual depreciation, and therefore in favour of him who gives the present bills for those to become current. I reject every insinuation that the credit of the latter will not be supported. It must be supported, and it will be supported. Therefore the sooner the present bills are out of circulation, the better for everybody. Circumstanced as they are in all respects, it is obviously the policy of the state, coincident with the interest of every subject. No position can be clearer than this, and stand less in need of arguments to support it. I avoid discussion in a case where the slightest reflection renders it unnecessary.

The present currency being brought in and cancelled, the bills to be issued will have every advantage to give them a circulation on a level value with silver and gold.

1. The quantity is limited by the resolution of Congress, and by the laws of the respective states, therefore it cannot surpass the present amount.

2. The quantity is small, being only ten millions of dollars for the whole union, our quota of which is six hundred thousand. This is all the paper-credit we can have, for there is no state-currency in New-Jersey.

3. The periods of redemption are ascertained; and the redemption of principal and interest with specie at the expiration of six years is guaranteed by the union, in case the state, by the events of war, should be rendered incapable to redeem the bills.

4. These periods are early, and yet the assessments cannot be burthensome.

5. The funds are precise, productive, and sure; for though real property or coin in bank are more striking pledges of redemption, because more visible, yet in fact as far as these are distinct from taxation, and independent of it, the latter must be preferable. What security can be so certain; what resource can be so productive as the industry of the community?

6. The bills carry an interest payable in coin or bills of exchange on stated conditions, at the option of the holder.

I can safely confide in the truth and soundness of the principles on which this currency is rested.—But from what has happened in the case of the old, prejudices and jealousies will operate to the disadvantage of the new. To remove these is to render an essential service to the righteous cause in which we fight.—

I take it for granted that a satisfactory assurance of a punctual payment of the interest annually in gold or silver instead of bills of exchange, would give this money a currency at par with specie, probably above it. I confess I can see no reason against assuming that such an assurance for the first year's interest would produce the effect. Nothing could suggest an additional security but the circumstances of the case out of which arise the prejudices and jealousies above mentioned. While some think the present stipulations sufficient, and others require something further, indecision prevails; and success, which in matters of this kind depends particularly on similarity of opinions, is rendered problematical. To effect so salutary a purpose as the decisive establishment of what it is hoped will shortly be the only paper-currency among us, the principles of an association will be submitted in the next Gazette; not because it is thought indispensable, but because it may be convenient and useful.

TRENTON, AUGUST 23.

Captain REILEY's account of the arrival of the second division of the French fleet, mentioned in our last, must be considered as premature, as no confirmation has yet come to hand. We can however assure our readers that such an armament is daily expected on the coast by the knowing ones.

Extract of a letter from Camp, dated Aug. 17.

“We have an agreeable piece of news from the Eastward; which is, that most of the enemy's Quebec fleet are taken and carried into Eastern ports—16 sail have already arrived, and more coming in.”

Wednesday last His Excellency JOSEPH REED, Esq. President of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, with his Suite, came to this place from Philadelphia, to take the command of the militia of that state; a large body of them being now encamped on the common below the town.

We hear that another body of Pennsylvania militia have crossed Coryell's ferry.

And on Sunday last Colonel HENRY NEIL, with a number of four-months men, arrived from the Delaware state, and marched yesterday for camp.

Within a week past several persons have died in this neighbourhood by the intensesness of the heat, and drinking cold water.

By Capt. Grinnell, who made his escape from the prison-ship at New-York on the evening of the 15th instant, we are informed, that the same day a very hot press took place in the city. Seven hundred men were procured by that means before he came off;—among whom were many refugees, labourers, and carmen; and the press continued when he left the prison ship;—that more lenity was shewn to the prisoners than usual; and that about 200 were on board the Strumbulo, and 120 on board the Scorpion, from which he escaped,—among them were Capts. M'Gee, Thompson, Keble, Proby, Bester, Spencer, and Venter, besides several others.

Thursday evening last four armed men came to the house of John Black, jun. in Springfield, Burlington county, and robbed him of a considerable sum of hard and continental money, also sundry wearing apparel; from Mr. Black's they proceeded to the house of Caleb Shreve, Esq. taking along with them a certain Mr. Lloyd as their guide, or to prevent his giving information to the neighbourhood, they robbed Mr. Shreve of a small sum of hard and continental money, but did not take anything else;—from Mr. Shreve's they went to the house of Mr. Cleayton Newbold, whom they robbed of a quantity of plate, a gold watch and money;—from Mr. Cleayton Newbold's they passed to the house of Mr. William Newbold, where observing a number of people about the house, they feigned themselves to be whigs and in pursuit of horse thieves, and did not attempt to rob. As soon as Mr. Lloyd was released from them he alarmed the neighbourhood; Col. William Shreve,¹ with a number of the inhabitants, immediately set off in pursuit of the villains, and overtook them at Borden's Run, on the verge of the pines, in a thick swamp. Mr. John De Cow observing their centinel, hail'd him, who answered by the discharge of his musket, and ran into the swamp; Mr. De Cow returned the fire, and pursued him so closely that he threw away his gun and plunder, among which was all Mr. Newbold's plate and Mr. Black's continental money and apparel.

One of the robbers it is said is since taken and lodged in Monmouth gaol.

New-York, August 26.

The Debates in every Session of Parliament affording us on this side the Atlantic continued proofs of their want of information concerning the real state of the Rebel Army, the Congress, their Financies, &c. &c.—The Printer with humble deference presumes to address the following sketches found in truth, to the noble and honourable Members of both Houses in their approaching Session, as well as to the good people of Great-Britain and Ireland at large, and he hopes for as candid a reception of the intelligence produced in his Gazette, as have in too many instances been granted to News-Papers published in other parts of America, craftily qualified, and stating occurrences with monstrous aberrations from truth, serving to impose upon Myriads of their ignorant and credulous constituents on this continent, highly colouring the exploits of their Generals and Armies, describing Mr. Washington, a Turenne, and Mr. Wayne, a Prince of Brunswick, to the Courts of Europe in general, as well as to the Republican Faction, their known allies and abettors, at present too greatly prevailing in the Mother Country.

WITHOUT money and without credit, the rebel interest is now supported by depredation and spoil.

No man will now part with any thing for paper money, old or new.—The rebel Commissaries have not credit for a farthing, in any part of the Continent; in every place they take what they want from the farmers, a horse, a cow, grain, hay, straw, and leave a certificate to be paid at Doom's Day, and in spite of all this licentiousness, Washington's army between Pompton and Tapan are at three quarters of a pound allowance of flour and fresh meat.

At the late irruption of their light horse (about 60) to Bergen, on Sunday the 13th inst. they found the inhabitants going to the church; some they insulted, others they robbed, and condescended to such pitiful exploits, as changing hats and cloaths, taking the buckles from their shoes, and in one instance of stripping off a man's breeches, and leaving an old pair of trowsers to cover his nakedness.

The most horrible oppressions are at the same time, used to force the militia to join them in their career to destruction. All their bands are made up of men and boys drafted from an unwilling militia, except the continentals who had been early beguiled to enlist in the continental army, and whose times are not yet out, or who, if they are, cannot get their dismissions.—Who at the opening of the present campaign were about 3 or 4000 in Jersey, and another 1000 in the Highlands, and Fort Stanwix.—They rely for augmentations entirely upon a militia, every where a majority abhorring the French, &c. against the protraction of the rebellion. They have departed from the old practice of classing them, forcing a number to produce a man, by extorted contributions, and now class them according to their property, and not their number of polls.—A man of between five and six thousand pounds estate, is obliged to find a substitute in the Delaware counties, or turn out himself, yet a certain county there, that was to have furnished long since 88 men, had not collected but 24 on the 10th instant.

The loyalists increase hourly, scarce a day passes without fugitives to this place, from the barbarities perpetrated by the usurpers in the upper parts of this, as well as from the neighbouring provinces.

Resolutions are forming in divers colonies, to resist the freedoms taken with private property to support what the rebels call their army. In the southern parts of Virginia, certain militia officers have lately laid down their commissions; and several thousands are gone from North-Carolina to join the King's troops on the advance into that province. They are doing duty in the interim at Cambden, where is an abundant supply of all kinds of fresh provisions from the surrounding country.

Yet for all this Mr. Joseph Reed struts through Princetown, boasting that his 500 forced recruits are 3000, crying along the road, our independency is established.—So a drunken beggar calls himself a King, the sober spectators laugh at such a King, and such a President General or Counsellor, or whatever else he is pleased to be stiled, at the head of a mob, notoriously the minority of the province, he plays the tyrant over us, as a little more time will demonstrate, unless he too can find means for an escape by a Lieutenant Generaley in France, or in Mr. Dean's path of speculation.

COW-CHACE

Canto II. will be inserted on Wednesday next.
 —The Royal Gazette, No. 408, August 26, 1780.

A letter from an officer of the American army at Head Quarters, Pracanness, dated July 22, 1780, contains the following, viz.

“The following is an extract from General Orders:— It is recommended to the officers of the American army, to have black and white cockades, a black ground with a white relief emblematic of the expected union of the two armies.

HEAD-QUARTERS, July 20, 1780.

The Commander in Chief has the pleasure to congratulate the army on the arrival of a large land and naval armament, at Rhode-Island, sent by his most Christian Majesty, to co-operate with the troops of these States against the common enemy; accompanied with every circumstance that can render it honourable and useful: The generosity of this succour, and of the manner in which it is given, is a new tie between France and America: The lively concern which our allies manifest for our safety and independence, has a claim to the affection of every virtuous citizen. The General, with confidence, assures the army, that the officers, and men of the French forces came to our aid, animated with a zeal founded in sentiments for us, as well as in duty to their Prince; and that they will do every thing in their power to promote harmony and cultivate friendship: he is equally persuaded on our parts, we shall vie with them in their good disposition; to which we are excited by gratitude, as well as by a common interest: and that the only contention, between the two armies, will be to excel each other in good offices, and in the display of every military virtue: this will be the pledge of the most solid advantage to the common cause, and of a GLORIOUS ISSUE to the campaign."

NEW-YORK, August 23.

Yesterday were brought to town a Colonel and Major Smock, of the Monmouth county militia, one of these was of the associated community of Retaliators upon the Tories, who were mentioned in one of our late papers.

The following Compositions of Mr. William Livingston, the Titular Governor of New Jersey, may serve to shew his real Opinion of the French Nation.

Extracts from the Journals of the Assembly of New-York, while he was a Member of it, and held the Pen for the House, as many on both Sides of the Lines can attest. See a List of the Members in the printed Journals, on Gen. Forbes's Success against Fort Du Quisne, now Pittsburgh, 31st of January 1759—the Assembly to the Lieutenant Governor in their Address:

" AS the Preservation of his American Colonies was " his Majesty's paternal Motive, for entering " into the present Quarrel with France, we should " be justly chargeable, with the greatest Ingratitude
 " and Insensibility, did we not, to the utmost of our “ Power, contribute to its vigorous Prosecution, and “ exert ourselves with the greatest Alacrity, in aiding

 “ our Sovereign in his most righteous and heroic Pur“ poses, of chastizing the Insolence of so unprovoked and “ perfidious an Enemy.

After speaking of the Success in Canada, 11th December following, they add, “Events which ought to inspire every benevolent “ Breast, with suitable Anticipation of the general Hap“ piness of Mankind, and to rejoice every loyal Subject “ in particular, for the illustrious Triumphs of his “ Country, over the unjust and merciless Designs of its “ Enemies; as well as universally to excite, the most “ ardent Gratitude to Almighty God, for enabling our “ Sovereign so effectually to chastize the Ambition of “ France, and to adorn his auspicious Reign, with so “ many, and such splendid Trophies.”

After the Reduction of Canada, at the Assembly, 29th of October, 1760, these are the words of the House;

“A Conquest replete with innumerable Advantages “ to the Nation in general, and which has delivered these “ Colonies in particular, from the Devastations of a “ cruel and barbarous Enemy—an Enemy rather bent
 “ on the Destruction of Mankind, than waging War “ either for their own Defence, or even from Motives of “ Ambition or Conquest. The Reduction of such an “ Enemy to his Majesty’s Obedience, attended with “ almost insuperable Difficulties, from the natural Sit“ uation of the Country, with so little Effusion of “ human Blood, has added fresh Lustre to his Majesty’s “ Arms:—And, by the generous Use made of our Su“ periority, the World is furnished with an Instance of “ Clemency, that has made British Mercy, even to tri“ umph over British Valour.

“No Consideration shall induce us to regret the “ Blood and Treasure expended in facilitating this in“ estimable Acquisition, save only (to which we are “ confident the Honour of the Nation will ever disdain

 “ to submit) the Surrender of this most important Con“ quest; which, in the Possession of the Crown, must “ prove to Britain the Source of immense Riches—to “ so perfidious a People, would only expose us to the “ keen Revenge of a defeated Enemy—Who, unre“ claimed by one Example, and by our Clemency un-“ softened, would doubtless relapse into their native “ Barbarity, and retaliate our Levity with more signal
 “ Acts of Inhumanity and Bloodshed.”¹

Speech to the Assembly at Haddonfield, in New-Jersey, 25th February, 1777.

“We ought to consider her (Great Britain) as “ hated by a potent Rival, her natural Enemy, and par“ ticularly exasperated, at her impervious Conduct in “ the last War, as well as her provoking Manner of “ commencing it—And thence inflamed with Resent“ ment, and only watching a favourable Juncture for

NEW-YORK, August 28.

General Washington, the Marquis de la Fayette, Generals Green and Wayne, with many other Officers, and a large Body of Rebels, have been in the Vicinity of Bergen for some Days past. They have taken all the Forage from the Inhabitants of that Place, and left them destitute of almost every thing for their present and Winter Subsistence. Their Officers were down as low as Prior's Mills last Friday, but did not seem inclined to make any Attack: Their Artillery, save some Field Pieces, with their Baggage, are about 20 Miles in the Country.

The Rebels on Saturday burnt Col. William Bayard's new House and Barn, at Castile, on the North End of Hobuck, and destroyed all the Forrage and Timber to be found there to a very large Amount: They went off on Saturday Night or yesterday Morning, and have not been since heard of.

Yesterday the ship Therese, Capt. Haggie, arrived here from Lisbon in 7 Weeks. Last Thursday 4 Leagues W. N. W. off Block-Island he heard a very heavy Cannonade, and the Day he came into the Hook he was chased by two Rebel Privateers.

TRENTON, AUGUST 30.

Extract of a letter from Boston, dated August 7.

“The fleet bound from England to Quebec has met with some interruption on their passage off the Western Islands. A French 74 fell in with it, and took twelve; which were ordered to the West Indies: The privateers belonging to Salem, Newbury, Boston and Cape Ann have eighteen more; and the remaining seven were proceeding up the river St. Lawrence, where were Capt. Hinman in a large ship well mann'd and two others, which will undoubtedly take the whole. Amongst the seven is a large ship full of ordnance stores. In London they were told, that all the rebel privateers were lost at Penobscot; that the risque was nothing; the underwriters received but ten per cent premium. Chief of the eighteen are got into port; four of them provision ships, the rest sorted cargoes. The richest and most capital stroke made on the British trade this war.”

Captain Dillon, of the Mercury Packet, lately captured and arrived at Philadelphia, with the crew, passed through this place on Monday last on their way to Elizabethtown, to be exchanged.

Hendrick Smock, Esquire,¹ and Lieutenant-Colonel John Smock,² of Monmouth county, were lately made prisoners by a party of the enemy from Sandy-Hook and carried to New-York.

¹ “At a meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of Lower Freehold,” June 6th, 1774, Hendrick Smock and others were appointed a committee for the township “to join with those who may be elected for the neighbouring townships or counties, to constitute a General Committee” to enforce the non-importation of British goods until the Boston Port Bill and similar acts should be repealed.—Minutes Provincial Congress, etc., 5. Stryker says he was Captain of the “Minute Men,” October 12th, 1775; Captain, First Regiment, Monmouth, 1777; Captain, Company of Artillery, Monmouth, and prisoner of war, September, 1780.

² Stryker gives John Smock's military record as follows: Captain, First Regiment, Monmouth, 1777; Major, ditto; Lieutenant Colonel, ditto, March 27th, 1778; prisoner of war, September, 1780; Colonel, same Regiment. John Smock was appointed a Justice of the Peace of Monmouth county, March 17th, 1786; again, November 23d, 1795, and again, November 13th, 1800.

COW CHACE,

CANTO II.

NEAR his meridian pomp the Sun
Had journey'd from the hor'zon,
When fierce the dusky Tribe mov'd on
Of Heroes drunk as poison.

The sounds confus'd the boasting Oaths,
Re echoed thro' the Wood,
Some vow'd to sleep in the dead Men's Cloaths,
And some to swim in blood.

At Irvine's Nod 'twas fine to see,
The left prepare to fight,
The while the Drovers, Wayne and Lee,
Drew off upon the Right.

Which Irvine 'twas, Fame don't relate,
Nor can the Muse assist her,
Whether 'twas he that cocks a Hat,
Or he that gives a Glisten.

For greatly one was signaliz'd,
That fought at Chestnut-Hill,
And Canada immortaliz'd,
The Vender of the Pill.

Yet the attendance upon Proctor,
 They both might have to boast of;
 For there was Business for the Doctor,
 And hatts to be disposed of.

Let none uncandidly infer,
 That Stirling wanted Spunk,
 The self-made Peer had sure been there,
 But that the Peer was drunk.

But turn we to the Hudson's Banks,
 Where stood the modest Train,
 With Purpose firm, tho' slender Ranks,
 Nor car'd a Pin for Wayne.

For them the unrelenting Hand
 Of rebel Fury drove,
 And tore from ev'ry genial Band,
 Of Friendship and of Love.

And some within a Dungeon's Gloom,
 By mock Tribunals laid,
 Had waited long a cruel Doom,
 Impending o'er their Heads.

Here one bewails a Brother's Fate,
 There one a Sire demands,
 Cut off alas! before their Date
 By ignominious Hand.

And silver'd Grandsires here appear'd,
 In deep Distress serene,
 Of reverend Manners that declared,
 The better Days they'd seen.

Oh curs'd Rebellion these are thine,
 Thine are these Tales of Woe,
 Shall at thy dire insatiate Shrine
 Blood never cease to flow?

And now the Foe began to lead,
 His Forces to th' Attack;
 Balls whistling unto Balls succeed,
 And make the Block-House crack.

No shot could pass, if you will take
 The Gen'ral's Word for true;
 But 'tis a d—ble Mistake,
 For ev'ry Shot went thro'.

The firmer as the Rebels press'd,
 The loyal Heroes stand;
 Virtue had nerv'd each honest Breast,
 And Industry each Hand.

But ah, Thadaeus Posset, why Should thy Poor Soul elope,
 And why should Titus Hooper³ die,

Apostate Murphy, thou to whom Fair Shela ne'er was cruel,
In Death, sha't hear 'her mourn thy Doom,
 Auch wou'd you die my Jewel?

Thee Nathan Pumpkin I lament,
 Of melancholly Fate,
 The Grey Goose stolen as he went.
 In his Heart's Blood was wet.

Now as the Fight was further fought,
 And Balls began to thicken,
 The Fray assum'd the Gen'ral's thought,
 The Colour of a licking.

Yet undismay'd the Chiefs Cominand,
 And to redeem the Day,
 Cry, SOLDIERS CHARGE! they hear, they stand,
 They turn and run away.

³ Jonathan Hopper, murdered by refugees in his bed at Wagaraw.

Last Friday and Saturday the rebels held a fête champêtre, with an harvest home, in the vicinity of Bergen, New-Jersey;—they drove off some cattle, brought a number of teams, which bore away some salt hay, and after pilfering (in their old petit larceny way) all the honest and trusty inhabitants, the week was closed very tragically indeed to (one of the greatest sufferers in America) Col. William Bayard, for on Saturday they visited his estate at Weehawk, destroyed the houses and burned his farms. They then repaired to Hoobuck, set fire to Col. Bayard's elegant house there, and one of the finest barns ever constructed; these, with several other improvements were burned to the ground; they proceeded still further, and set fire to the grass, parched by the late uncommon scorching weather, which continued two days in raging flames, when one of the most valuable orchards existing, was utterly destroyed.

PHILA. On Friday last the Camp which had been formed at Trenton by the Militia of this state, by orders of His Excellency General Washington, broke up in consequence of a countermand from him, or advices received from Europe. It consisted of 1500 Infantry, two companies of artillery, with 4 pieces of cannon, and a troop of Light Horse. During their encampment they daily practised the manœuvres and discipline introduced into the Continental army by Baron Steuben, and made a very great progress. The greatest harmony and good order prevailed. A market was established, which the inhabitants of the neighbourhood regularly attended, and the respect paid to private property was such, that all the damage done in three weeks, did not amount to more than fifty pounds specie, agreeable to an appraisement made by two Freeholders of New-Jersey. They were well provided with tents, and all other necessaries for actual field service. In a few days more, the whole, with the addition of Lancaster, York and Cumberland, would have made a corps of 3400 men. All under the command of His Excellency the President of the State, ready to Co-operate with the Continental army, if their services had been immediately necessary.

CHATHAM, August 30.

Last week our army moved down to Bergen invited the cooped up Britons out to a trial of their skill, which invitation they prudently declined accepting. We are told they drove off some hundred head of cattle and sheep; likewise brought off a considerable quantity of wheat and forage.

CHATHAM, SEPTEMBER 6.

By intelligence from the Southward we learn, that our army in South Carolina, under the command of General Gates, has lately been repulsed with the loss of upwards of one thousand men killed and taken prisoners, and that General Gates, with difficulty, escaped sharing the fate of the latter;—that Baron De Kalb, who commanded the Maryland line of Continental troops, was wounded and taken;—that the two armies met one another in the night, both endeavouring to gain a certain piece of ground;—that to the pusillanimous behaviour of the militia the disaster may be attributed.

Mr. William Livingston (son of Mr. Peter Van B. Livingston) and Lieut. Paton of the Dragoons, were both lately killed at camp in two different duels. What pity, such promising youths, who might be of service to their country, should be so untimely slain, in mistakingly supporting their honour.

Died, at Newark, on Monday last, Mr. Samuel Morrel, late an inhabitant of Long-Island.

JOHN HAMTON.

FOR THE NEW-JERSEY JOURNAL,

GRIEVANCES proposed, and published, to be by the only proper authority of the state of New-Jersey considered and redressed.

ATTENTION! all attention! candid reader, to the feelings of mankind, and to the dictates of common sense and reason.
When the Americans first engaged in the present war, liberty and property were the great and important objects held up to view; objects worth contesting; worth ten thousand struggles. What a pity then, these objects should disappear, be lost, and suffered to go out of sight; better let a preacher forget his text, ramble from his subject, and never return to it more; the consequence would be safety, and the blunder compleat accuracy, in the comparison.—The cause for which we contend is a common one.—Therefore one as well as another are equally interested. From whence then has originated the most glaring inequality; there is rottenness or mistake somewhere, otherwise the burden would not be so laid upon the shoulders of some, the least able to bear it, and others almost exempted, and scarcely obliged to touch it, with so much as with one of their fingers. Horrendum dictu! It must be acknowledged, that the New-Jersey militia, and especially those of Essex county, have done even wonders; their labours, toils, expences, and dangers are abundant. Witness (among a number of other things not now mentioned) their ready compliance with the requisitions of Assembly, in hiring six months men, at a time when the raising of the money to pay them, on account of its scarcity, was next door to impossible, to serve in other places and counties, and then turn out themselves, to guard and defend their own, amidst hay and harvest, leaving all to rack and ruin at-home, or run the venture of a fine not exceeding one thousand pounds. In the mean while, the exempts, and such who some time ago, had given a few dollars for substitute men (perhaps now fighting against us) rest easy and quiet in their own houses, and on their own plantations, clear of these troubles, dangers and expences adding day by day to their wealth at home; or by huckstering or labouring abroad, receiving for one day nearly double the amount of a poor militia man's wages for a whole month; when, perhaps, he has a numerous family of children to support, or suffer by the means.—Now then, that such evils, in part, at least may be removed, and justice take place, and all do something like their proportion under our present difficulties and distresses, 'tis hoped, and warmly urged, that petitions be forthwith drawn up, and sent into the General Assembly of this state, at their next meeting, praying, that a law be immediately passed to raise the wages of each and every militia man who turns out in his country's service, when properly called, equal to a common day's labour. This can be no more than what is justly called doing right, between man and man; this would give satisfaction to thousands, supply the state with a sufficient number of militia soldiers, whenever wanted; leave us all nearly upon one floor, in point of duty or burden, since we must either turn out in person, or pay something that resembles an equivalent to them who do.—In consequence of which, peace among ourselves would bid fair to take place, court martials and finings, on account of delinquents, almost, if not altogether, cease.—Justice and judgment, would then begin to run down our streets as a stream, and righteousness as an overflowing flood.

TO THE WORTHY CITIZENS OF NEW-JERSEY.

Friends and Countrymen:

IN the exertions necessary to prosecute a war, or to carry into practice any national measure, it is hardly to be expected, though highly just and reasonable, that each individual will contribute proportionately to his abilities of mind, body and estate. So different are the degrees of virtue and publick spirit in different men, that one will do more from the motive of love to his country, than another can be brought to do even by the controul of the laws.

None of us are unacquainted with the rise and progress of the present revolution. The good and brave, the liberal and well principled, voluntary and without prospect of other reward than that of sharing in the happiness to be derived from the establishment of civil and religious liberty, have undertaken and carried it on, resisted by the opposition of some, and retarded by the languor and neutrality of others. Such is human nature, and we cannot alter it; such will ever be the case in contests of this kind. To wait for the proportionate exertions of all, is disappointment, disgrace and ruin. Under the experience we have had can it be supposed that this country will lose, or even injure so good a cause rather than risque or expend a little property? Will the meretorious citizen relax his activity because his neighbour does not shew equal zeal or make a proportioned sacrifice? How mean, how hopeless, how contemptible in the eyes of all flesh would our condition have been, had we held such language and acted upon such maxims at any time since the commencement of the war! There are conjunctures in every government for which legal forms cannot fully provide, and happy is that country where the patriotick dispositions of the people, guided by temper and wisdom, supply the unavoidable defects of the law.

These remarks are stated to shew that should the propositions mentioned in the course of this paper be thought to involve some uncertainty, they ought not, on that account, to be rejected, if anything they suggest may lead to the advancement of the publick good.

It has often been said, that if the interest of the bills of credit, about to be issued in pursuance of the resolutions of Congress of the 18th of March last, were assured to be paid annually in silver and gold instead of bills of exchange, this would provide against all danger of instability. That bills of exchange are not understood by all, nor are they, in many other respects so convenient. I do not doubt the truth of these observations, yet they may not be essential; and neither justice nor policy would have admitted such a stipulation under the least risque of a disappointment. If however such assurance should be deemed indispensable, and the general confidence would be thereby fixed, the following hints, improved upon by those who are more capable, may not be without their use.

The first year's interest of the quota of New-Jersey is eleven thousand two hundred and fifty pounds, or thirty thousand dollars. For the purpose of collecting a sum in specie adequate to the discharge of this, let it be proposed that men of good heart and ability throughout the state institute a subscription on terms of the following purport:

1. The payments to be made in silver or gold to the Commissioner, for the time being, of the continental loan-office of the state, to the sole use of answering the said interest.

2. The payments to be made in such proportion as may be requisite at the expiration of eleven months from the time the bills begin to be issued, and continued, as necessary, until the subscriptions are paid off.

The reason of making the subscriptions payable to the loan-officer for the state, is obvious from the Act of the Legislature under which the bills are emitted; and the period of eleven months is mentioned that the money may come in seasonably, and that no delay or disappointment may be suffered.

Should the bills be some months in issuing, the whole of each subscription need not be paid in at once. This will be an accomodation to the subscribers, and be productive of no inconvenience, as the remainder can be called for as the issues of the bills shall require. On the practicability of accumulating the fund proposed to be subscribed, it may not be amiss to observe, that the sum appears large no longer than till we come to parcel and distribute it. Suppose that the thirteen counties of the state produces, one with another, fifty subscriptions for each, the average of these will be about six and forty dollars; double the number of subscribers, and it is reduced to a little more than three and twenty. An inconsiderable sum when compared with the importance of establishing a currency so essential at this time, and of avoiding the suspicion and therefore the danger of a fluctuation similar to that which, in a recent instance, has spread abroad so many mischiefs! But we may go farther, and note, that as a sixth part of the whole quota is to be sunk in the course of the next year, the sum calculated as necessary to satisfy the interest may be lessened in that proportion; and an average subscription, taking the number last abovementioned, would be about nineteen dollars. Here, however, no notice is taken of the probability that part of the redeeming tax may be paid in the bills of other states. The thought may be deemed nugatory, but I cannot help observing, that the silver shoe-buckles in New-Jersey would, if sold, produce more than the whole sum, and replace themselves with steel or brass into the bargain.

As to the indemnification and repayment to subscribers, a thing which ought not to be forgotten, the following remarks are submitted:

1. By the resolutions of Congress bills of exchange for the interest are payable annually at the loan-office. At all events therefore, nothing can be risked but the discount at which they may possibly sell below par. Of the probable rate a judgment can be formed from that of the bills now paid for the interest of money in the funds; recollecting that they have continued to approach nearer and nearer to an equality with specie from the time they began first to be paid out.

2. When the bills of credit about to be issued are found to have a currency at the same rate with silver and gold, individuals will prefer them as more convenient than bills of exchange, and the publick may as well pay them. This will secure subscribers; and besides, the receipt of interest at the office will be an object of less consequence, as the trouble, however small, will be something, and the difference between holding the interest in a bill, or separately from it, none at all.

3. As the prejudices against foreign loans are, in a great measure corrected, and as it is known these are attainable, it may, at the term of a year, be practicable to pay this interest in coin, though, as was before observed, it might not have been expedient to make such a stipulation under the least uncertainty.

4. As taxes must be paid to answer the publick exigencies, as well as to redeem the bills, and as part of the former may be paid in specie, a fund may by this means come into the hands of the Legislature to answer the subscriptions in whole or in part.

5. The confiscated estates which remain unsold, may, if the government think fit, be appropriated to this use; or, if it should be thought more advisable, to the payment of the interest in the first instance. If it should be objected to the ideas above-stated, that a provision of this kind would extend only to the payment of the first year's interest, and leave the subsequent on the present ground; it is readily to be answered, that, on the best arguments, more will not be necessary: But if, contrary to expectation, this opinion should be wrong, the measure may be repeated under a double advantage, a greater proportion of silver and gold, and a diminution of the quantity of paper currency.

Should a measure of this nature be wholly rejected as unnecessary, improper, or difficult of execution, the following will probably be less objectionable:

1. Let an engagement or association be formed by the officers of government, and men of business, influence, trade and property throughout the state for receiving the bills to be issued as specie in all payments.

2. In addition to the above, and with the same object, let the bills now current be brought in and exchanged, agreeably to the opinion given in the act for redeeming them.

With respect to the first of these, it is no farther eligible than as it may give fuller operation to the law, and remove the misgivings and confirm the minds of the suspicious and less informed. Examples of this are before us, and there is no doubt the effect may be beneficial under prudent management. It is a general consent which gives a currency to any money, and this consent is formed and regulated by the leading and monied part of the community.

On the second it is almost unnecessary to remark how much the withdrawing of the present currency from circulation must tend to establish the just value of the new bills; and, it may be added in passing, how much the establishment of these will induce the holders to exchange the present for them. The effect is reciprocal; and little penetration is required to distinguish that although taxation is a good means to bring about this end, because it is certain and infallible, a more rapid and immediate would be greatly preferable.

It will be recollected that proposals of this nature rest much upon the remarks stated in the beginning. As they contain no project of exclusive gain to individuals, they are not addressed to such as make this the pole-star of their actions. Patriotism and not private interest must have the higher influence. But as little loss can be incurred, and the publick benefit must be great; and as that which is advantageous to the community must be so to a majority of the individuals, they do not come wholly unrecommended to any one.

If these hints have no other merit, they have however this, that they are offered with every deference, and with hopes of at least calling the attention of better judges to a subject, the importance of which is felt and acknowledged by all. Reflection and discussion are the inlets of knowledge; and publications on matters of this kind, as well as of any other, may be rendered useful rather than injurious, if, instead of building up new systems or taking down the old, they are employed in stating information and giving aid to the execution of publick measures.

SPERANDO.

TRENTON, SEPTEMBER 6.

Friday night the 25th ult. a party of our six months men, under the command of Ensign Fitz-Randolph, went upon Staten-Island and brought off a Justice Lake and five other principal inhabitants, without any loss on our side.

Doctor Bloomfield is exchanged for a Dr. de Bass a Surgeon to one of the Hessian corps.

We learn that the Alliance, lately arrived at Boston, brings advice that the second division of the French fleet had not sailed when she left L'Orient.—The reason of the delay has not yet transpired.

Friday last the Pennsylvania militia, which were encamped near this town, were reviewed by His Excellency Joseph Reed, Esq. Commander in Chief of that state. They were formed in brigade about nine o'clock in the morning; soon after which His Excellency and his suite appeared in the field, when the troops performed a variety of military manoeuvres with great ease and exactness. They then marched thro' the town in proper military order; and after they had returned to their camp, were dismissed by His Excellency. They were as fine a body of militia, it is thought, as ever appeared together in America, well clothed and equipped, and made a truly martial appearance.

The following ADDRESS to His Excellency JOSEPH REED, Esquire, President and Commander in Chief of the militia in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, signed unanimously by the officers, was presented by Brigadier-General Lacey, Col. B. Eyers and Col. Will:

Camp near Trenton, Sept. 1, 1780.

SIR.

IMPELLED by principle, we feel it our duty to express to your Excellency the high sense we entertain of your exertions and alacrity in assembling the militia at this place, agreeable to the orders of our excellent Commander in Chief; and at the same time that we admit the necessity of the measure we cannot help lamenting our countermand, as we indulged the flattering hope, from the uniform system of subordination and discipline which your Excellency inculcated, and which we were determined to support, that we should at least have answered the expectations of our country, and disappointed the wishes of our enemies, foreign and domestic.

Prompted by motives of political safety and personal attachment, we beg leave to assure your Excellency that it will ever be our pride and glory to follow you to the field, and that we shall most cheerfully afford you every support in our power to promote the general weal of America, and the particular interest of the state over which you so honourably preside.

To which His Excellency returned the following Answer:

Gentlemen,

THE obliging sentiments you have just expressed, cannot but give me very sincere pleasure. The requisition of our service upon this occasion was founded upon the most apparent propriety, and was too explicit to admit of doubt or delay. We have shewn our illustrious allies, our excellent Commander in Chief, and the whole world, that when our country calls it is our pleasure to obey. The alacrity with which so numerous and well appointed a body of troops have appeared in arms, the improvement in discipline, and the chastity of conduct with respect to private property, reflects the highest honour upon the officers and men, and have made my command not only honourable but pleasant. Had the situation of public affairs required our proceeding to take an active part in the operations of the campaign, I doubt not you would have done equal honour to the state and yourselves by your conduct in the field, and it would have been as it ever will be, my duty and pride to partake of your danger and glory.

The opportunity is only deferred for a little time, and I trust it will not be long before we shall congratulate each other on a glorious independence, well secured by an honourable peace.

The marks of personal attachment and affection I have experienced in this short tour of duty have made an impression on my mind which no length of time can deface. To see my country free and happy is the first object of my wishes, and to see the many brave and valuable men who have distinguished themselves in the contest duly honoured and rewarded is the next.

Among these I shall ever feel a particular attachment to you, Gentlemen, who on every account both public and private, merit my warmest acknowledgments.

JOS. REED, President, and Commander in Chief of the Pennsylvania Militia.

Head-Quarters, Trenton }
September 1, 1780. }

Extract of a letter from an officer, dated English Neighbourhood, 30th August, 1780.

“On the 24th the light camp, which you know is commanded by Major-General the Marquis de la Fayette, took up its line of march from the place of its encampment in the vicinity of Fort Lee, and moved on the road to Bergen. We arrived near the town about one o’clock at night, where we halted, and fixed our piquets and patrols. Col. Steuart with his regiment took post within about musket of Paulus Hook, the place where our friend Lee so very deservedly gained such reputation. Altho' I have been on this ground before, I was not 'till then sufficiently sensible of the multitude of difficulties which must have been opposed to his success.

“In the morning the light camp took a position on the high ground between Bergen town and Paulus Hook. The city, the shipping, Long-Island, and the harbour lay exposed to our view. The troops in New-York of course had an opportunity of seeing us, and I make no doubt felt themselves injured by our near approach.

“All this day the infantry were employed in foraging as low as the Kills. The enemy fired a number of shot upon those on Bergen Neck from Staten-Island, but they were too ineffectual either to disturb the waggoners who were loading with grain, or to drive off any of the foragers.

“I cannot say the amount of cattle and dry forage collected; but certificates were given to the people that they might have as little room as possible for complaint. These will procure them, at some future day, compensation; and in the mean time they should consider, that they have contributed heretofore very little to the support of this war; and that what was taken for the use of this army, and to prevent its becoming a source of subsistence to the enemy, does not amount to the value of their taxes. In this light we have only assisted them to liquidate a tax, cheerfully paid by their fellow-citizens, and which they could have paid in no other manner, owing to their particular situation.

“But a business of this kind is seldom unattended with more or less of injury to the household property of the inhabitants. The soldiers will find occasions to pilfer, however watched by the officer. It is impossible to exclude every practice of this nature. All the officer can do in this case, is to punish the offender when discovered, and restore the goods. This was done in every instance; and one of the soldiers hanged on the spot.

“What think you of all this, with Clinton’s eyes fixed upon every motion of ours? Have we not offered him an opportunity to fight us, had he been so disposed? And as he has not done it, was it not submitting to a glaring insult? Will not the world consider it in this light? And can he any longer boast to his vain Court, that he only wished and waited for a fair occasion to fight? Have we not offered him battle every day since we recrossed the North river and took post near Dobb’s ferry? And at this instant is not our situation at the liberty-pole, and the neighbourhood of Fort Lee, of the nature of a military challenge? We have done the same thing, precisely, as a man in private life who has been injured, and who twits the fellow by the nose, or shakes a cudgel over his shoulders, who abused him. Clinton has behaved like the fellow who quietly submits to the chastisement.

“The light camp in this movement were supported by the Pennsylvania line. It commanded the passage at Hoe-buck. The Jersey brigade Bull’s ferry, and the York troops the intermediate space between that and the rest of the army which remained encamp’d at the liberty-pole. The whole was under Major General Greene, who commands the right wing of the army. His arrangements in this movement do him a great deal of credit.

“We are again where we were. Clinton, t’is said, has landed at Frog’s-point, in the county of West-Chester, with intention I would suppose, to take care of himself. I wish we could irritate him to come where we want him.

“I think it probable that the army will change its situation in a few days.”

SIR,

As the enclosed letter, which was intercepted coming from New-York, may possibly entertain some of your readers, it is sent to you for publication. The writer will perceive that proper care has been taken to conceal her name. I have only to ask the Lady's pardon for the few comments that are added.
August 30th, 1780.

New-York, August 27th, 1780.

WE'VE almost, sweet sister, been frighten'd to death,
Nor have we, as yet, quite recover'd our breath.
An army of rebels came down t'other night,
Expecting no doubt that the British would fight.
Next morning we saw them parade at the Hook*
And thought to be sure this was too much to brook;
That soon would the river be crowded with boats,
With Hessian and English, to cut all their throats:
So we dress'd in high taste to see them embark,
Not thinking Sir Harry would go in the dark;
To light a retreat, as seen in his letter†,
He once us'd the moon—for want of a better;
Much less, having sworn, that the rebels he'd maul,
Could it enter our heads, --- he'd not go at all.
Tho' now I think on't, ere since Greene beat old Knyp‡,
Not one of his heroes have open'd a lip,
Except to abuse them for fighting so well
With Greene at their head --- to find quarters in h - ll.
—Ah! Tabitha, these men can swear with such grace,
One can't be offended, tho' done to one's face.
All day I was hurried without knowing why,
Each moment expecting to see them pass by.
The officers bowing, the drums in a clatter,
Their heads rising up, like ducks out of water,
Then glancing on me with a passionate air,
Turned round to their men and most charmingly swear.
But why would they thus our soft bosoms alarm,
Should they do like their masters—where is the harm?
But this was all vision, Tabitha, to me

* Paulus Hook.

† The battle of Monmouth, where Sir Harry Clinton says, that he took advantage of the moon. I suppose this is what the Lady alludes to. It may be well enough, however, to set her right, by informing her, that he did not begin his retreat till the moon had gone down, which vulgarly speaking, was really to take advantage of the moon.

‡ Battle of Springfield, 23d of June, 1780.

Not an officer came, so much as to tea.
The Major himself, who has always some story
To lessen the worth of American glory,
Or asham'd to be seen, or else of the day,
Would not venture to cross me, tho' just in the way ;
But, stop'd, like one shot at, then whisk'd up a lane :
I'm sure the poor man felt a great deal of pain.
At length came the night, overloaded with fears,
And shew'd us on what we had lean'd for five years.
The men who had wish'd for occasions for blows.
Now suffer'd themselves to be pull'd by the nose.
Sir Harry it seems, was more sullen than ever,
And Andre complained of much bile in his liver.
The Generals all met, as grave as magicians,
The magii of law, or the sagest physicians :
But all that was done, tho' they sat till near night,
Was to keep at their bottle—and not go to fight.
Pray tell me, what think you of these men in York,
Who formerly cross'd like a bit of dry cork.
When nothing was near but a regiment or troop,
As easily drove as a boy drives a hoop :
But when that the rebels came close to their eyes,
Pretend not to see them, tho' thicker than flies ;
Let Washington's army do just what they please,
While they, in the cholic, would seem at their ease.
For my part, dear sister, I hate all deceit,
You know I love something that's solid to eat.
You still may remember, when Tom kiss'd my hand,
I told him his doom—was a cassock and band.
God help us, Tabitha, how women will change,
But sure it was meant we should have a long range,
Nor were we design'd to be shut in a cloister,
Or fix'd to one spot, like a root or an oyster.
But here, on this island, one scarce gets a span,
And now not an inch, let one do what they can ;
And long as the rebels keep up such a pother,
We shall do nothing—but look at each other.
Seest thou, my good sister, where you are, these rogues,
Who fright us to death, without stockings or brogues.
They say a French Marquis commands, my dear girl,
Is it not the same, would have cudgel'd our Earl?§
We're told he has made them look all very neat ;
(I wish he had brought over shoes for their feet)
That to each he has given, to put in their hat,
A feather, with swords and sword belts, and all that ;
While the officer has, to make him feel bolder,
The piece of fring'd gold, that worn on the shoulder.

§ Lord Carlisle, I suppose is meant.

—This Marquis of theirs, who gives without measure,
 Must sure be possessed of infinite treasure.
 How else, my Tabitha, could any onè stand,
 Or spend so profusely—to fight for their land.
 What reward can he get? From Congress a vote;
 (The Marquis, you know, has no need for a coat.)
 Were I in their boots, as such mortals are rare, I'd vote for one more—should France have one to spare.
 —I've heard too, the youth has a sweet wife at home,
 I wonder she suffers him thither to roam:
 I think in my heart, she must wish him more nigh,
 I hope 'tis no sin to confess—so do I.
 But stop with this chatter, what, what do I say,
 Here's news that the rebels have all gone away;
 At least they have march'd to a place call'd Fort Lee,
 Twelve miles from the Major and twelve miles from me.
 Quick, Bet, bring the tea, for before it be long,
 The sweet fellow comes, with his laugh and his song,
 His quirks and his cranks, and his stories so droll—
 Oh! sister, the Major's the man on the whole.

FOR MRS. CALDWELL'S TOMB.

By a Friend.

SACRED to the memory of Mrs. HANNAH CALDWELL, consort to the Rev. JAMES CALDWELL, of Elizabeth Town, in New-Jersey, who fell—a victim to her country, on the 7th of June, 1780—aged forty-two years and nine months.

PASSENGER!

Thou treadest o'er the remains of a woman whose fair character, and final catastrophe, merit a monument
more durable than brass or marble; and which will remain
indelibly engraven on the breasts of her countrymen, to the last period of recorded time.
She was, among her sex, uncommonly distinguished;
exhibiting to the world,
thro' the whole course of her earthly race,
a bright constellation of the female virtues.
With undeviating punctuality, she performed every religious, social, and relative duty:
To a numerous offspring,
the tenderest of mothers:
To her servants and domestics,
a kind and indulgent mistress:
Of conjugal fidelity and affection,
the most exemplary model.
But what gave singular lustre to an assemblage of virtues was—that condescending affability, that sweetness of temper,
that heaven-born benevolence,
which were her characteristic and distinguishing qualities.
A serene and placid aspect, joined with the softest accents of expression, ever disarmed the resentment of her weapons, and repressed the ebullitions of censure and malevolence.

These engaging manners attracted the peculiar love and esteem of her extensive acquaintance, among whom she found not a single enemy.

But, as her crowning glory, adding divinity to her graces,
she was a SINCERE CHRISTIAN!

On that memorable day—(an æra never to be forgotten in the American annals) when the army of the British tyrant entered into this state, and, with merciless barbarity, desolated these fertile fields;—
laid this fair village in ashes;— violated female chastity;—
and fired even the temple of the deity.

This peaceful daughter of heaven, shocked by the tumults of war, retired to her sequestered and hallowed apartment;
here seated,
in calm and pensive contemplation, cherishing too a lovely innocent in her own innocent bosom, weeping over the effusions of human blood—deprecating the calamities of her country—and imploring heaven for the pardon of it's enemies, she was

(blush ye spirits of their ancestors at the horrid tale!)
by the ensanguined hands of a British ruffian, instigated by malice, cool, deliberate, and infernal—in one fatal moment

Dispatched,
like her divine Saviour, thro' a path of blood, to her long-wished for NATIVE SKIES!
Leaving an affectionate companion, and nine children, in their tender and unformed years, to bewail their unutterable—their irreparable loss.

READER!

If thou art—a man
thou can'st not refrain a sigh at her melancholy story.
If—of the softer frame, thou wilt drop a tear at the tomb of one who was the boast of thy sex; and who would have shed a thousand for thee, had her's been thine own hapless fate.

If—a lover of thy country thou wilt depart from this spot, consecrated to her dust, filled with external heart-felt HORROR at the execrated name of A BRITON.

FOR THE NEW-JERSEY JOURNAL.

To the ASSOCIATED LADIES for public donations, in the State of New-Jersey.

LADIES,

I HAVE with pleasure perused the scheme for donations, proposed by you, for the support of the suffering soldiery of this state. The respectable characters which are inserted, command veneration; and whilst I most religiously applaud the patriotism and generosity of my country-women, most brilliantly exhibited in this instance, I must beg your indulgence to suggest a more proper channel for the display of your benevolence—The impracticability of raising by subscription, and distributing among the soldiery, sums adequate in any measure to their wants, may readily be conceived; besides, we serve a country, which we hope to redeem from the verge of slavery to the pinnacle of liberty and opulence, able to recompense us fully; and we deem it below the dignity of a soldier, to receive that support from the hand of charity, which our services have merited, and which our country must reward us with—And tho' it will ever be my duty and inclination to remember, with a grateful heart the kind tender of these fair matrons and maids, I never wish to partake thereof, since the application of it to orphans and children, born with the army, whose fathers have bled and died in the service, or so far beggared themselves as to be unable to give them proper education, would be far more laudable and beneficial to society. By this scheme many of the rising generation will be rescued from prisons, workhouses, and bawdhouses, and enabled to live creditably, and spend their useful lives in grateful acknowledgments to their matrons and protectresses.

May the inventors and supporters of the foundling hospital be peculiarly blessed of Heaven!—Such an institution may be of the most capital and lasting benefit to the human race.—Such patrons do the poor forlorn babes, which hover in our camp, greatly need. Their cries and groans ascend even to the Heaven's, and call loudly for some kind hand to help them in their wretched situation. It must rend the heart, not callous and obdurate as the fiend of darkness, to see these poor innocent creatures suck from the breast, the contagion of every vice, and daily increase therein as they increase in stature, without any to rest[r]ain or correct them. The instinctive desire of mankind to propagate his specie, dec[li]nes not in any station of life; it behooves, therefore, those to whom providence has given the means to shield indigent offspring from infamy, and direct their lives to such employments as will be most honourable to themselves, and advantageous for the community.—Perhaps some over delicate and precise reader may sneer, and ask who this advocate for bastards and the offspring of truls is? This, thou virtuosi, it behooves thee not to know. Rest contented with being assured he is one who disavows supporting unlawful embraces, and neither has nor wishes to have, while he remains in the service, any children of his own; but one who humanity and the well being of his fellow-creatures, and the interest of the republic, induces to plead the cause of indigent destitute children, and enforce the advantages of a virtuous education. Let not then a rancorous malice against supposed prostitutes, or an over scrupulous tenacity for virtue, lead your minds and actions from the most praise-worthy exercise thereof.—You may thus wrong the innocent of your sex, or suffer their offspring to plunge into a deeper abyss of guilt and woe. The most effectual method to reform such evils, is to instill into the minds of youth the principles of virtue.—Should any say this would not encourage our youth to turn out with alacrity and fervor, and expose themselves in the field at this time, and thereby answer the exigency of the times for which it is designed? Let such remember that honour and love are the greatest stimulants to a soldier. The commendations, applauses, and caresses of the fair, from which he received his existence, and careful nursing, in the helpless days of infancy, and upon whom depends the most pleasurable moments of this life, will excite him to action with a greater zeal than any secular reward; and that a competent provision for their children, in case of misfortune, is deemed more important, to the sensible and feeling part, than present self support—You, ladies, have already shewn your love for your country, respect and compassion for the supporters thereof.—In this you have done well.—It will serve to alleviate the toils of his fatiguing life, and man his arm with fresh strength to combat his and your foe. The recollection of being supported and encouraged by the delicate hands and tender breasts of the fair, will make even cowards bold, and urge forward the valorous soul with impetuosity, which nothing but the salvation of such agreeable and worthy objects can inspire.—Having thus far answered your salutary purpose, let the benevolent design be prosecuted for the lasting benefit of the state.—That the growing generation may rise up and call you blessed.—That with the æra of peace, virtue, modesty, and industry, and every acquired grace, may flow in upon the land, like a mighty torrent, deluging lewdness, prophanity, sloth, and every other ruling vice. Should any object to the impracticability of the scheme, a few moments contemplation will lead them to an easy application of it. Our state has very little unsettled lands, it must therefore flourish by manufactures only, and no method will expedite this more than bringing up orphans and indigent children to business. You will by this means not only have the pleasure of extricating helpless fellow-creatures from infamy and ruin, but the glorious satisfaction of enriching your country, and directing the internal police of it to advantage—I fear I have already wearied you—Believe me, however, to be, with every sentiment of respect and esteem,

Your most obedient,

Devoted humble servant,

MACHAON.

TRENTON, SEPTEMBER 13.

This day the Honourable the Legislature of this state meet here according to adjournment.

Last Sunday night week Ensign Fitz-Randolph, of Woodbridge, made another excursion on Staten-Island, and brought off one Anthony Wright, and two other noted Tories.

At the Supreme Court held here last week, JOHN JAMES, Keeper of the public gaol, was convicted of having put an Anspach deserter from the Convention troops in irons, and deprived him of the necessaries of life, in order to induce him to give up his hard money, which he effected, by further promising the fellow his liberty and a pass to travel with, which he had actually given him. The Court sentenced him to be turned out of office, pay a fine of ten pounds lawful money, and be imprisoned four months.

FOR THE NEW-JERSEY JOURNAL.

An APPEAL to the PUBLIC, in behalf of the cause of TRUTH.

SINCE it is the duty of every member of the community, to endeavour to promote the good of the common-wealth; I trust a brief essay upon truth may not at this time be amiss. Truth is one of the divine attributes; and consequently infinitely amiable in itself, as are all the divine perfections. In order to illustrate in some measure the excellency of truth, it may be necessary to contrast it with error, and falsehood its opposites. We read in the beginning of Genesis, of the root, and foundation of all our calamities; viz. our first parents hearkening to the temptations of Satan the father of lies, and eating of the forbidden fruit, contrary to the divine command; and thereby have brought upon themselves and their posterity a corrupt nature, vile affections, and appetites, an inclination to and delight in sin, and wickedness; and an utter aversion to, and hatred of that which is truly good and holy.

As the moral law is the transcript of the divine perfections, its precepts are infinitely holy and excellent in themselves, and infinitely worthy to be observed and practised by all the human race: For want of complying heartily with all the divine commands, is owing all the mischiefs and evils of our world. And perhaps no one of the divine commands is of so much importance to man as the knowledge and belief of the truth. But as this idea of truth would lead me beyond my present design, I shall return to the point in hand; which is to say something concerning the excellency of truth between man and man. That it is of great importance to our selves and others to speak the truth and lye not, must be evident to every one who considers the end for which speech was first given to man; which was to communicate his thoughts, on any subject, and cause others to receive the same ideas which he had in his own mind; and correspondent feelings and affections answering thereto. Now for persons to contradict the known truth, and utter falsehood with a design or mislead others, must be contrary to every principle of honesty and integrity. I speak with respect to such persons as have a right to the truth; (perhaps there may be some excepted who are unjustly in arms against us, and our clearest rights and priviledges) which leads me to take notice of a method taken by some to promote the cause of liberty, which I think rather injures than promotes it. viz. Forgeries, invented for the sake of encouraging others in times of trouble and danger; which may perhaps, just for the present answer that end; but after the truth comes to light, the vain dream vanishes, and sinks the spirits so much the lower in proportion as they were elevated before. Our cause I trust, needs none of those artifices, being the cause of truth, and righteousness; which we have appealed to Heaven for the defence of; and Heaven have hitherto plead our cause, and defended us, and our property, beyond our expectations. Therefore let us not be guilty of breaking the divine commands, in order to promote liberty; which naturally destroys it; and to the breach thereof may be ascribed all the calamities of our unhappy world. The public will please to excuse imperfections, and accept the well meant aim of their sincere old friend.

A FRIEND TO LIBERTY.

—The New-Jersey Journal, Vol. 2, Numb. 83, September 20, 1780.

Friends and Fellow-Citizens!

WHILST we are spilling our blood and exhausting our Treasure in defence of our own liberty, it would not perhaps be amiss to turn our eyes towards those of our fellow-men who are now groaning in bondage under us. We say "all men are equally entitled to liberty and the pursuit of happiness;" but are we willing to grant this liberty to all men? The sentiment no doubt is just as well as generous; and must ever be read to our praise, provided our actions correspond therewith. But if after we have made such a declaration to the world, we continue to hold our fellow creatures in slavery, our words must rise up in judgement against us, and by the breath of our own mouths we shall stand condemned.

The war has already been prolonged far beyond what we once thought the abilities of Britain would admit of; and how much longer it may please Providence to suffer it to rage, or what the final event of it may be, is to us altogether unknown. The children of Israel, we find, could not conquer their enemies whilst they, the Israelites, had "the accursed thing" amongst them. And as tyranny is the accursed thing against which we have waged war, how can we hope to prevail against our enemies whilst we ourselves are tyrants, holding thousands of our fellow creatures in slavery under us?

The Lord did not leave it a doubt with Joshua what was the reason they could not succeed; he told him in plain terms the reason was because they had also transgressed his covenant—they had "the accursed thing" among them. And if the Lord is still the same God, deciding the controversies amongst men upon the same principles, then, although Britain may have transgressed his covenant* in endeavouring to enslave us, if we are not only also, but equally in the transgression, by holding the Africans and their posterity in slavery, how can we expect he will decide in our favour, unless we recede from such transgression? Unless we abolish tyranny, "the accursed thing," from amongst us, and do that justice to others which we ask of him for ourselves? Nay, how can we have the face even to ask of him a blessing on our endeavours, however laudable they may be, to defend ourselves against tyranny and oppression, whilst we are thus acting the part of tyrants and oppressors? Surely we ought rather to blush at our own conduct;—to acknowledge our own transgressions, and, before we presume to solicit a blessing, endeavour, if possible, to obtain forgiveness. Can we imagine our prayers to Almighty God will meet with his approbation, or in the least degree tend to procure us relief from the hand of oppression, whilst the groans of our slaves are continually ascending mingled with them? I fear, indeed, that not only our prayers, but our publick fastings, are an abomination in his sight, and will so remain until we have washed our hands from tyranny, and the voice of a slave is not to be heard in our land.

But let me beseech us not to deceive ourselves; should we undertake to abolish tyranny, and to put an end to that other accursed thing, the gain of oppression hitherto derived from our slaves, as Saul did when he undertook to destroy Amalek. It seems, from what he said to Samuel on meeting with him soon afterwards, that he thought he had done all that was needful—that he had really fulfilled the will of the Lord. But alas! he was greatly deceived. For he had coveted, and the people had coveted, what they had no right to enjoy; and by yielding to this evil covetous spirit he drew down the vengeance of Heaven upon him, and his fairest hopes were blasted.

Luke vi. 31.

They could not it seems, bear to give up all—the King and the best of the things they saved. And if we keep our present slaves in bondage, and only enact laws that their posterity shall be free, we save that part of our tyranny and gain of oppression, which to us, the present generation, is of the most value—is like the King, and the best of the sheep and the oxen; and however specious or plausible the preambles of those laws or our pretensions may be, we shall plainly tread in the footsteps of Saul; and I fear our reward, like his, will be the vengeance of Heaven, and the blasting of our fairest hopes. In short, the iniquity of such a measure must be so flagrant, that, to use a trite saying, those who run may read it. It would be plainly telling our slaves, we will not do justice unto you, but our posterity shall do justice unto your posterity. And should such indeed be our language to those who are unfortunately in our power, what can we expect from the just Judge of the universe, but that he will say unto us, I will not deliver you from your tribulation, but your posterity I will deliver.

Let us, my countrymen, derive wisdom from those who have gone before us: Let the people and their rulers beware of an evil covetousness.

In our publick and most solemn declarations we say, we are resolved to die free;—that slavery is worse than death. He, therefore, who enslaves his fellow-creature must, in our esteem, be worse than he who takes his life; and yet, surprizing as it may seem, we hold thousands of our fellow-men in slavery, and slumber on under the dreadful load of guilt—Worse than murderers and yet at ease! A melancholy reflection indeed, that habit should be capable of reconciling the human mind to the greatest of all crimes—of lulling it to rest in the practice of that which ere long, must cause it to tremble before the great, the awful tribunal; where all deception will be done away, and our transgressions appear in their fullest magnitude and greatest deformity! What shall we then think of the unlawful gain, we now derive from the labour of our innocent, tho' unfortunate slaves? Myriads of whom perhaps we shall there behold smiling in the fullest fruition of peace, whilst their late lordly oppressors, conscious of their own guilt, trembling wait the awful sentence.

Let me now entreat us to pause a while, and examine our own hearts. Let us survey our ways with the impartial eye of reason and justice; and whatsoever shall appear to be out of order, that let us correct. Whilst we are making high pretensions and pompous declarations with regard to our own views and publick virtue, let us take care to act up to those pretensions and declarations; but above all things, let us candidly, in the sight of Heaven, do that justice to others which we ask for ourselves. This is the way for us to succeed in our present contest; this is the surest way that we can take to obtain PEACE, LIBERTY and SAFETY.

If we are determined not to emancipate our slaves, but to hold them still in bondage, let us alter our language upon the subject of tyranny; let us no longer speak of it as a thing in its own nature detestable, because in so doing, as hath been observed, we shall condemn ourselves. But let us rather declare to the world, that tyranny is a thing we are not principled against, but that we are resolved not to be slaves, because we ourselves mean to be tyrants. Such a declaration would certainly be more candid, or at least would better correspond with the conduct I have mentioned, than those we have usually made; though perhaps it might not be quite so pleasing, for justice is so lovely, and virtue so amiable, that we all love to be deemed their votaries, however estranged we may be from their ways.

Whatever colouring slavekeeping may receive from interested individuals who wish to keep it on foot, there is something in its nature so universally odious, that we meet with but few of the slavekeepers themselves that are willing to be thought tyrants; like unchaste women, they cannot bear to be deemed what they really are; for nothing is more clear, than that he who keeps a slave is a tyrant. Without tyranny, there can be no slavery in the sense here meant. And where slavekeeping is countenanced and upheld by any state or empire, the tyranny becomes national, and the iniquity also; and in such case a national scourge may very well be looked for. If, therefore, neither the love of justice, nor the feelings of humanity are sufficient to induce us to release our slaves from bondage, let the dread of divine retribution—of national calamities—induce us to do it.

I know it is not fashionable for those who write news-paper pieces to risk their names with the pieces they publish; but I shall venture to deviate from the custom in this particular case, because however unpopular it may be, I have a desire to appear one of the testimony bearers against a practice so unjustifiable as slavekeeping is at all times and in all countries, but more especially in this at the present juncture. I have endeavoured to express my ideas in as few words as possible; and as the piece is short, so when fully and impartially considered, I hope it will prove offensive to no individual.

JOHN COOPER.

CHATHAM, September 13.

The British Generals Tryon, Mathew and Pattison, are embarked for England, with several other officers.

By a packet arrived at New-York, from Falmouth, the 1st instant, we have the following intelligence: That a vast number of rioters, men and women, had been tried and condemned; some were executed, the rest would share the same fate in small divisions and on different days: That the trial of Lord George Gordon was to come on at Common Law at St. Margaret's Hill in the borough, on the 12th of July; no other than his Grace the Duke of Gordon, his Lordship's brother, Lord Adam Gordon, and the Earl of Aberdeen, his uncle, are permitted to visit his Lordship: That immediate and effectual measures will be taken to establish a reconciliation with America, previous to which a coalition of parties will be established: That Lord Egremont has come entirely round; Lord Rockingham has been at Court and it is commonly said that his party will shift over into the ministerial scale, and that he will have the Lord Lieutenancy of Ireland. Even Wilkes is said to have become respectful to administration. It is certain that he acted with more spirit and propriety in quelling the riots, than any other city magistrate; and that he broke into a house and seized the papers (tempora mutantur) of a person that plied the men with inflammatory pieces: That in consequence of the late reconciliation between the Royal brothers, the Duke of Gloucester's children paid a visit to their Majesties on the 24th of June, and continued till ten o'clock at night: That Mr. Miller is likely to be hanged for printing two treasonable pieces, viz. England in Blood, and the Thunderer.

TRENTON, SEPTEMBER 20.

His Excellency the Chevalier de la Luzerne, passed thro' this place yesterday, on his way to Head-Quarters.

On the 15th instant Congress promoted Brigadier William Smallwood, of the Maryland line, to the rank of Major-General in the army of the United States.

We are informed that Adm. Rodney's fleet which arrived a few days ago at Sandy-Hook, consists of one ship of 80 guns, eight of 75, one of 64, one frigate and a brig.

It is said he sailed several days after a French fleet from the same quarter, of 12 sail of the line, and six frigates, supposed to be bound to Rhode-Island. As Rodney's fleet had a passage of only nineteen days, it is probable they have out-sailed that of the French.

Two days after the arrival of Rodney's fleet, 4 of the ships put out to sea, and stood to the eastward.

Colonel John Neilson is appointed Deputy Quartermaster for this state, in the room of Moore Furman Esq. resigned.

Lately died at Cape-May, in an advanced age, Aaron Leaming, Esq. for many years a Representative in General Assembly for that county.

Also died, on Monday morning last, after a short illness, Mrs Reed, consort of His Excellency Joseph Reed, Esq. President of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Last week one hundred and ten recruits for the continental army, passed through town on their way to camp, from Cumberland county in Pennsylvania.

Sunday night last the refugees made an excursion from Staten-Island to Woodbridge, and carried off Mr. Thomas Brown and two other inhabitants.

Several deserters from the enemy came to town since our last.

Extract of a letter from Morristown, Sept. 17.

"News current here is, that the second division of the French fleet is arrived at Rhode-Island—That on their passage they fell in with and took 60 British transports bound for New-York."

We hear that a large prize snow was brought into the Delaware by the Saratoga on Tuesday last. Her cargo is said to be very valuable.

NEW-YORK, Sept. 25.

Last Week a Party of Moyland's Light Horse were at Elizabeth-Town, collecting Cattle for the Use of the Rebel Army. They took a Pair of fat Oxen out of a Team on the Road, and gave the Driver a receipt for them; They then proceeded to the Point Meadows, and took away every Hoof from thence; but were opposed on the Way by the Militia and the Commissioners of the Place, who obliged them to relinquish their Booty. They next began to levy Contributions at Newark, and attempted their fine Flock of Sheep: They were there also obliged to desist. But we are told it was agreed that all the fat Cattle in Newark and its Neighbourhood were to be collected by 150 Light Infantry, and drove to the Mountain Meeting-House near that Place last Saturday, where the honest Farmer was to be convinced the Receipt of a Rebel Commissary would be much better for himself and Family during a long hard Winter, than a Quantity of good fat Beef.

We hear that General Washington and the Marquis de la Fayette, are both gone to Rhode Island, in order to consult with the Commander of the French Troops at that Place; and that the Rebel Army crossed the North River last Thursday and Friday.

TRENTON, Sept. 20.

Last week one hundred and ten recruits for the continental army, passed through town on their way to camp, from Cumberland county in Pennsylvania.

Sunday night last the refugees made an excursion from Staten Island to Woodbridge and carried off Mr. Thomas Brown and two other inhabitants.

Several deserters from the enemy came to town since our last.—The Pennsylvania Journal, September 27, 1780.

To the Printer of the New-Jersey Gazette

SIR,

IN my letter to you a few weeks ago, I promised a cool and critical examination of an assertion frequently to be met with in the pieces published by Mr. Rivington, in New-York, that humanity is the characteristic of the English nation. I imagine they intend this to render the accounts published of their barbarity to the Americans incredible. If the English in general are distinguished for humanity, it is natural to suppose that acts of cruelty said to be committed by them, are either false or exaggerated, or perhaps rare and single instances in which individuals have degenerated from the national virtue. So far I cannot help approving the wisdom and penetration of these gentlemen, for such an argument is not only much more plausible in itself, but much more powerful in lessening the odium of base actions, than either attempting to deny the facts or endeavouring to justify them by the guilt or indescrction of the sufferers. To this may be added, that as it is for their countrymen at home that this reasoning is chiefly intended, so upon them it will certainly have an irresistible effect. How can they avoid being willing to veil every story of this kind in uncertainty, or bury it in oblivion, upon a principle which must be so grateful, because it brings so much credit to themselves.

These circumstances sufficiently justify me in attempting to bring this assertion to the trial. I have said I would do it coolly and critically, because it cannot otherwise be done fairly; and this may surely be expected from an emigrant from Great-Britain, as I confess myself to be, who, by impeaching in any particular the national character of the English, cannot be supposed to be doing great honour to himself. We are told then that humanity is the characteristic of the English nation. If this means anything, it carries in it a tacit comparison, and implies that English people in general are more tender-hearted, and treat with greater gentleness enemies who are in their power than other nations. In this view of the subject, I shall beg leave to examine very briefly, 1. The probability of it from their known character, and from their own claims in other respects. 2. The witnesses who give testimony in favour of it. 3. How the matter stands in fact, from the most remarkable and most recent examples.

I. As to the probability of it, &c. I think it is admitted by all others, and hardly denied by themselves, that the English are proud and fierce, and have a hatred or contempt of other nations. Their pride they call dignity, and say that it arises from the riches of their country, and the excellence of their constitution. With what self-complacency does the Englishman speak of the avarice of the Dutchman, the levity of the Frenchman, the gravity and solemnity of the Spaniard, the cunning and deceit of the Italian; and not to go so far from home, of the impudence of the Irishman, and the poverty and lousiness of the Scot. They will perhaps tell me that this is no more than national prejudice, and that it is common to all nations. I do not very well know how it is in this respect in other nations, but supposing it to be pretty much the same, all that my argument requires is, that the English are not free from it, and indeed I am firmly of opinion that they have it in as high perfection as any people under the sun.

Again, when I say the English are fierce, they themselves will admit three-fourths of the character, saying that they are daring and brave. This is their chief excellence and their perpetual boast. But will not other nations add, that with respect to the whole people, it is more a savageness of nature than nobleness of principle, for that their favourite diversions of cockfighting, bullbaiting, horseracing, and even cudgelplying and prizefighting upon the stage, are a clear proof of their general temper and disposition. These savage amusements are now either wholly confined to England, or at least more practiced there than in any other country in Europe. We need but read the dissertations of men of reflection and virtue among themselves, who have made many attempts to banish these practices, as a reproach to the nation, and particularly inconsistent with humanity. What opinion do moderns form of the humanity of the Roman people, when they hear of their passion for the shews of gladiators? Just the same that I form of an English mob running with the utmost eagerness to see a bull torn in pieces by dogs, or forming a ring with ineffable satisfaction to see two noted bruisers knocking one another's eyes out, and shouting the praises of the victor, while the vanquished lies before them vomiting blood.

But I have also said that the English have hatred and contempt of other nations. As to this I confess it may seem strange that a hatred or contempt for foreigners should be a national character of the English, since their ancestors were a heterogeneous mass, made up of fugitives or freebooters, from many other European nations, Angles, Saxons, Danes and Normans, who in their turns conquered and possessed the country; yet it is not more strange than true. There has never been in any age, as far as history can look back, a more certain way to raise a popular commotion in England, than to cry out against the admission of foreigners. It was with the utmost difficulty that the wisdom of some of their Kings could introduce manufacturers of different kinds into the country. When King Edward the third brought over some clothiers from Flanders to England, his clear-headed subjects complained of it as an intolerable oppression, and said they came to eat the bread out of the mouths of the natives, whereas it was to put bread into the mouths and money into the purses of them and their posterity. As late as the year 1518, in Anderson's history of commerce, there is an account of what he calls a shameful riot at London, occasioned by English prejudice against foreigners. I might mention more lately the popular cry against the Jew bill, and other naturalization bills, but instead of giving many examples of this, I refer the reader to a living author of their own, Dean Tucker, of Bristol, who, in his essay on trade, has asserted that a hatred of foreigners is characteristic of the English, and proved it not only by an induction of historical facts, but by English laws. This author indeed seems to think that they imbibe it from the soil, and that those whose fathers were foreigners have it as strong as those whose progenitors have been there for many ages. Now I only ask this plain question, Are all these things true, and yet is humanity the characteristic of the English nation? Is it reasonable to suppose that a proud and fierce people, holding all others in contempt or detestation, will treat them with gentleness and humanity, when they fall into their hands as conquered enemies?

The 2d subject of enquiry is, Who are the witnesses in favour of this assertion? Though it is not expressed, I imagine the assertion itself should imply that the truth of it is generally acquiesced in. Humanity, say they, is the characteristic of the English nation. Is not this as much as to say it is the mark by which it is known? Though foreign nations may deny that people the possession of other good qualities, their humanity all must be obliged to confess. But is this really the case? The English have many characters given of them by other nations, some good, some bad, but never that of humanity, taking it in a comparative sense. The English, say some, are a bold, active, enterprising people, penetrating in science, and industrious in arts. If they have the honour of few original discoveries, they have carried the discoveries of others, particularly in the arts, to as high perfection in the execution, as any people in the world.—Again, the English, say some, are proud, assuming, sullen and whimsical. They are continually boasting of the happiness of their country, and yet more people put themselves to death in that country, from a disgust at life, than in all the other countries in Europe put together. It is an observation of foreigners that the very animals of England, such as cocks and dogs, have a fierceness in their nature greater than that of the same species in other climates. It is also said that there are more humourists and persons of an odd, singular and fantastic turn of mind in England, than in all the world besides. Sometimes you may meet with a man who will not shave his beard nor pare his nails, nor do anything as other people do.—Sometimes you will hear of one that has shut himself up in a room, or even confined himself to a bed for many years tho' in perfect health. It is not yet thirty years since a gentleman in England left a legacy of L.100 a year to a setting dog, which dog, after the testator's death, made a tour of a great part of the island, in a chaise, attended by a livery servant. I myself knew two old maiden ladies in London who kept four and twenty cats, and spent their whole time and pains in ordering the affairs of that amicable society.

All these things we hear observed frequently, but who are the witnesses in favour of English humanity? The English themselves verily, and no others: On which I only make this remark.—Though we should give them full credit in point of veracity, and believe them sincere, it will be but cold comfort to an American; for from what they have been pleased to call lenity and humanity in their past conduct towards us, we shall be apt to conclude that they do not know the meaning of the terms. I have always thought that sentiments were a stronger and better proof of character than particular facts. For example—No scene of barbarity recorded in history, ever gave me such an apprehension of the brutality and ferocity of ancient times, as that historians have agreed in celebrating Sesostris, King of Egypt, for his clemency, because he did not put to death those Princes whom he attacked and conquered, without provocation. But on what terms did he suffer them to live? He ordered them to bring him an annual tribute, and on that occasion used to yoke them in his chariot, and make them, in place of horses, draw him to the temple. How much worse than death would this appear at present to a captive Prince? Agreeably to this reflection, I often say to myself, Does the English Court and Parliament blame General Howe for excessive lenity? then miserable indeed must be the case of those who shall be so unfortunate as to taste of their severity.

It remains only now, 3d, to consider how the matter stands in fact, and particularly from the most recent examples. On this part of the subject I shall not lengthen out my discourse, by enumeration of acts of cruelty committed by particular persons, but shall hint at one or two circumstances that seem most directly to point out the national character, and then give a succinct view of what has happened to us in this unnatural war. The laws in England are more sanguinary than those of other nations: Theft, tho' the value of the things stolen be very inconsiderable, and robbing or taking from the purse of the owner the least possible sum, is there punished with death, and indeed so many other crimes, that public executions are amazingly frequent. Both the cause and effects of this makes against the humanity of the people. It can have no other cause but either the multitude and boldness of criminals, or the bloody mindedness of those who make the laws, or both; and as to the effect, it must certainly make life seem contemptible to those who see it so lightly and frequently taken away. To this let me add, what I am persuaded will seem quite incredible to those who never heard of it before, viz. That though Great Britain is a commercial state, if a vessel is cast away upon that coast, and a small part of the crew perhaps have got to the shore, they will run a greater risk of having their goods plundered and themselves knocked on the head, than on the coast of any other country of Europe. Nay, in Great-Britain itself it is unspeakably safer to be cast away in the Orkney Isles, or the Highlands of Scotland, than in any part of England. In the first case, though there are pilferers enough, yet if you can apply to the Minister or the Laird, the one by reason and the other by authority, will protect you entirely; but in the other, neither Minister nor Magistrate will be able to preserve you from the gentle hands of the English nobility.

But what shall we ourselves say, from our own experience. Others may pay little regard to our sufferings, and still less to our complaints, but it is probable that our own judgements will be chiefly governed by our own feelings. A man may boast of his clemency as much as he pleases, but if he burns my house, murders my wife and children, and sends myself to starve and rot in a dungeon, telling me I am gently treated, because I am destined to the cord, it will not be easy to induce me to believe him. We, my countrymen, have seen American prisoners exchanged, coming from New-York, and British prisoners coming from Philadelphia. How meagre and emaciated the one, how hale and hearty looking the other? Does it need any other evidence to tell us how they have been reciprocally treated?

It is certainly contrary to the laws of nature and nations, and the dictates of humanity, to burn and destroy where there is no fortress, and when it has no tendency to weaken the resisting force or starve a hostile army; yet every part of this continent where the English army has been, is marked with desolation. They burnt Falmouth, in Casco-Bay, they burnt Charlestown, in the neighbourhood of Boston, Fairfield, in Connecticut, Kingston, in New-York, Hillsborough, Springfield, and great part of Elizabeth-Town, in this state, many churches and dwellings in Pennsylvania, and Norfolk, the largest town in Virginia. These, my dear friends and fellow-sufferers in New-Jersey, are the fruits of English clemency; and if your own distresses will suffer you to look back a little more than thirty years, you will find such a scene in the Highlands of Scotland, after all resistance was over, of burning houses and turning out women and children naked to the mountains, as would melt the hardest heart. For my own part, I am a native of that country, which I left in the year 1747, and since that time, as often as I have been present at the church service, I have always added at the end of the litany, the following secret ejaculation: And from English humanity to conquered rebels, good Lord deliver us.

I am, &c.

The General Election for Members of the Legislature of this State will be on Tuesday the 10th of October next, agreeable to the constitution.

On Tuesday night the 19th inst. Ensign Fitz-Randolph with eight men of the state regiment, visited Staten-Island from Woodbridge, and surprized a picquet of fourteen New-Levies, but took only four prisoners, as the remainder of the nimble-footed guard trusted rather to their heels than their firelocks for safety.

THE inhabitants on both sides of the river Delaware, contiguous to the continental ferry, are hereby notified, that Col. Samuel Miles, Deputy Quartermaster for the state of Pennsylvania, and Col. John Neilson, Deputy Quartermaster for the state of New-Jersey, will attend at Patrick Colvin's ferry on Monday the 9th of October next, from 10 o'clock to 12, and at Capt. John Clunn's tavern from 2 o'clock to 4, to consult with such of the said inhabitants as shall attend and determine whether it will conduce more to the public interest to continue the continental ferry where it now is, or have it removed down the river where it formerly was kept.

COW CHACE..

CANTO III.

NOT all delights the bloody spear,
Or horrid din of battle,
There are, I'm sure, who'd like to hear
A word about the cattle.

The Chief whom we behold of late,
Near Schral[en]berg haranguing,
At Yan Van Poops unconscious sat
Of Irving's hearty banging,

Whilst valiant Lee, with courage wild,
Most bravely did oppose
The tears of woman and of child,
Who begg'd he'd leave the cows.

But Wayne, of sympathising heart,
Required a relief
Not all the blessings could impart
Of battle or of beef;

For now a prey to female charms,
His soul took more delight in A lovely *Hamadryad's arms,
Than cow driving or fighting:

A nymph, the Refugees had drove Far from her native tree,
Just happen'd to be on the move,
When up came Wayne and Lee.

She in mad Anthony's fierce eye
The hero saw pourtray'd,
And all in tears she took him by — The bridle of his Jade.

Hear, said the nymph, O great Commander!
No human lamentations;
The trees you see them cutting yonder
Are all my near relation's,

* A Deity of the Woods.

And I, forlorn! implore thine aid,
 To free the sacred grove;
 So shall thy prowess be repaid
 With an immortal's love.

Now some, to prove she was a Goddess,
 Said this enchanting Fair
 Had late retired from the Bodies,‡
 In all the pomp of war;

That drums and merry fifes had play'd
 To honour her retreat,
 And Cunningham himself convey'd
 The Lady thro' the street.

Great Wayne, by soft compassion sway'd,
 To no enquiry stoops,
 But takes the fair afflicted maid
 Right into Yan Van Poop's.

So Roman Anthony, they say,
 Disgrac'd th' imperial banner,
 And for a gypsy lost a day,
 Like Anthony the Tanner.

The Hamadryad had but half
 Receiv'd redress from Wayne,
 When drums and colours, cow and calf,
 Came down the road amain.

All in a cloud of dust were seen
 The sheep, the horse, the goat,
 The gentle heifer, ass obscene,
 The yearling and the shoat,

And pack-horses with fowls came by,
 Befeather'd on each side,
 Like Pegasus, the horse that I
 And other poets ride.

Sublime upon his stirrups rose
 The mighty Lee behind,
 And drove the terror-smitten cows,
 Like chaff before the wind.

‡ A cant appellation given amongst the soldiery to the corps that has the honour to guard his Majesty's person.

But sudden see the woods above
 Pour down another corps,
 All helter skelter in a drove,
 Like that I sung before.

Irving and terror in the van,
 Came flying all abroad,
 And cannon, colours, horse and man
 Ran tumbling to the road.

Still as he fled, 'twas Irving's cry,
 And his example too,
 "Run on, my merry men all—For why?"
 † The shot will not go thro'.

As when two kennels in the street,
 Swell'd with a recent rain,
 In gushing streams together meet,
 And seek the neighbouring drain,

So met these dung-born tribes in one,
 As swift in their career,
 And so to Newbridge they ran on,—
 But all the cows got clear.

Poor parson Caldwell, all in wonder
 Saw the returning train,
 And mourn'd to Wayne the lack of plunder,
 For them to steal again.

For 'twas his right to seize the spoil and
 To share with each commander
 As he had done at Staten Island
 With frost-bit Alexander.

In his dismay the frantic priest
 Began to grow prophetic.
 You had sworn, to see his lab'ring breast,
 He'd taken an emetic.

I view a future day, said he,
 Brighter than this day dark is,
 And you shall see what you shall see,
 Ha! Ha! one pretty Marquis;

† *Five Refugees ('tis true) were found
 Stiff on the block house floor,
 But then 'tis thought the shot went round,
 And in at the back door.*

And he shall come to Paulus-Hook,
 And great atchievements think on,
 And make a bow and 'take a look,
 Like Satan over Lincoln.

And all the land around shall glory
 To see the Frenchman caper,
 And pretty Susan¹ tell the story
 In the next Chatham paper.²

This solemn prophecy, of course,
 Gave all much consolation,
 Except to Wayne, who lost his horse
 Upon the great occasion.

His horse that carried all his prog.
 His military speeches.
 His corn-stalk whisky for his grog.
 Blue stockings, and brown breeches.

And now, I've clos'd my epic strain,
 I tremble as I shew it,
 Lest this same warrio-drover, Wayne,
 Should ever catch the poet.
